

MĪRĀNBĀĪ

GUJARĀTA AND ITS LITERATURE

A SURVEY FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES

BY

KANAIYALAL M. MUNSHI, B. A., LL. B.,
President, Sahitya Sansad; Fellow of the University of Bombay.

WITH A FOREWORD

BY

MAHĀTMĀ GANDHI

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO. LTD.

6 OLD COURT HOUSE STREET, CALCUTTA

53 NICOL ROAD, BOMBAY

36A MOUNT ROAD, MADRAS

LONDON, NEW YORK AND TORONTO

1935

Printed by M. N. Kulkarni at the Karnatak Printing Press, Karnatak House, Chira Bazar Bombay, 2, and Published by A. W. Barker, Manager, Longmans, Green & Co. Ltd., 53 Nicol Road, Ballard Estate, Bombay.

IN GOOD KING CHARLES'S
GOLDEN DAYS

FOREWORD

The only reason for inviting me to write a foreword to a literary work such as Shri Munshi's can be that I am called 'Mahatma'. I can make no literary pretensions. My acquaintance with Gujarati and for that matter any literature, is, for no fault of mine, next to nothing. Having led a life of intense action since early youth I have had no opportunity of reading except in prisons whether in South Africa or in India. Shri Munshi's survey of Gujarati literature has made fascinating reading for me. His miniature pen-portraits of writers give one a fair introduction to their writings.

Shri Munshi's estimate of our literary achievement appears to me to be very faithful. The survey naturally confines itself to the language understood and spoken by the middle class. Commercially-minded and self satisfied, their language has naturally been 'effeminate and sensuous'. Of the language of the people we know next to nothing. We hardly understand their speech. The gulf between them and us the middle class, is so great that we do not know them and they know still less of what we think and speak.

The dignified persistence of Shri Devendra Satyarthi, a writer whom I do not remember to have ever met, has made me peep into his remarkable collection of folk songs of the provinces he has been travelling in. They are the literature of the people. The middle classes of the provinces to which the songs belong are untouched by them, even as we of Gujarat are untouched by the songs of folk, i. e. the language of the masses of Gujarat. Meghani of the Saurashtra school has done folklore research in Kathiawar. His researches show the gulf that exists between the language of the people and ours.

But the folklore belongs to an order of things that is passing away, if it has not already done so. There is an awakening among the masses. They have begun not with thought but with action, as I suppose they always do. Their language has yet to take definite shape. It is to be found somewhat, but only somewhat, in the newspapers; not in books. Shri Munshi's work therefore may be said to have only commenced with the volume before me. It was necessary. But he has to continue the work so well-begun. He has the requisite passion for his work. If he has health, he will now go direct to the people and find out what they are thinking, and he will give expression to their thoughts. The unquestionable poverty of Gujarati is a token of the poverty of the people. But no language is really poor. We have hardly had time to speak since we have begun to act. Gujarat like the rest of India is brooding. The language is shaping itself. There is enough work awaiting writers like our author.

Munshi has alluded to Parsi-Gujarati. So there is. It is unfortunate that there is Parsi-Gujarati. It is confined to novels and stories of the shilling shocker style. They are meant merely for passing the idle hour. The language is tortured out of shape. And just as there is Parsi-Gujarati there is also Muslim-Gujarati though on a much humbler scale. It is impossible to ignore these two streams. They are not wells of Gujarati undefiled. But no reviewer of Gujarati literature can afford to ignore the existence of works which hundreds, if not thousands of Parsis and Muslims read and by which, may be, even shape part of their conduct.

M. K. GANDHI

PREFACE

This book fulfils a desire, cherished for many years, to place a connected story of Gujarāta and its literature before the English-reading public. The invitation which the Chairman of the Post Graduate Studies in the Calcutta University extended to me about the end of 1929 to deliver a series of lectures on Gujarātī Literature provided the necessary opportunity. The invitation remained unavailed of as I joined the Civil Disobedience movement in April 1930; but gaol life, which immediately supervened, provided the necessary leisure to translate the desire into effort.

A systematic history of the Gujarātī literature cannot yet be written. With the materials at our disposal it is well-nigh impossible to reconstruct the past life of Gujarāta, or to read its inner meaning accurately, and in this work, therefore, I have attempted only to describe, in a connected form, its historical and literary currents. This book was written mainly during the two and half years between 1930-1934 which I spent in gaol. During this period, as I sat writing in my prison cell, Gujarāta passed through a fiery ordeal. When I came out in December 1933 the book was already in the press and I found it impossible to introduce any new impressions, but from what little I could see I remained convinced that my analysis of the currents in modern Gujarāta did not require a revision. The immediate after effects of an ordeal are always deceptive; they may appear to, but do not, alter habits and tendencies which belong to one's nature.

I confess to finding great difficulty in assessing the value of contemporary works. The difficulty has been much greater as no such review was possible without a reference to the work of my wife and myself. The choice before me was either to bring the book up-to-date, or to close it with the year 1913 and leave untouched a glorious historical and literary age of Gujarāta. This age claims the best works of Narsinhrao, Khabardar and Nanālal.

It has given birth to promising creative tendencies in modern literature. It also includes amongst its achievements the literary output of Mahātmā Gandhi, and the emergence of Gujarāta on the stage of world politics and literature. What to do with myself, while writing about this period, was the most trying problem of all, and I am indebted to my friend Dr. I. J. S. Taraporevala for coming to my rescue with a chapter, which, perhaps, does me more justice than I deserve.

In the book itself I have restricted myself to a descriptive and critical sketch of the literature of every period on the background of its historical setting, but modern Gujarātī literature or its future possibility cannot be properly understood without realising the great change which is daily coming over the life of the province or appraising the forces which are bringing it about.

The history of Gujarāta records the interplay of two factors: (a) the individuality of the Gujarātīs expressed through a consciously directed group life; (b) the influence of the culture which, originating with the early Āryans, has maintained the homogeneity of Indian life and the continuity of its traditions for the last three thousand years. To the first, Gujarāta owes its outlook on life, its social forms, its language and literature, and the urge to remain a single social organism. The second has created forces which stimulate and unify its collective impulses impelling it to find a greater self-fulfilment in the corporate life of India.

These forces, in the ultimate analysis, can be traced to the geographical determinants of Gujarāta: its natural frontiers and its soil. Protected by the sea on the west, by the sands of Kaccha and Rajputāna on the north, the Aravalli, the plateau of Mālva, the Vindhya, the Sātapudās and the Sahya Ghāts on the east and south, its rich alluvial soil has reared a race of men and women, soft and luxury-loving and yet possessing qualities which maritime activi-

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

KING CHARLES II	Frontispiece
MRS BASHAM	facing page 6
THE MAID	„ 14
SIR ISAAC NEWTON	„ 28
GEORGE FOX, THE QUAKER . .	„ 40
NELL GWYNN	„ 46
DUCHESS OF CLEVELAND . .	„ 54
THE GATHERING	„ 68
DUCHESS OF PORTSMOUTH . .	„ 74
DUKE OF YORK	„ 82
GODFREY KNELLER	„ 90
CATHERINE OF BRAGANZA . .	„ 108

Bombay, which with its suburbs has over 3,00,000 Gujarātīs, is a unique factor in the life of Gujarāta. This meeting-ground for currents from all over India will always remain national, carrying Gujarāta with it. Again, it links Gujarāta with Mahārāshtra where Sāṁskṛtic and Brahmanical influences abound. In its University, which created the Sāṁskṛtic Revival in literature, the predominance of the classics is yet unchallenged, and from it, influences, enriched by a study of Āryan culture, go out moulding thought and expression. And Gujarāta will continue to receive their inspiration from Bombay more steadily and effectively than at any time since the fall of Pāṭāṇa in A. C. 1297.

Gujarāta, then, can look forward to a steady development of the forces which underlie its history. But their nature and direction have undergone a change, and their influences will be relatively different.

The racial factor will also become important in the future development of the Gujarātīs. Out of a crore and odd Gujarātīs, about 20% live in town, the rest in villages; 89% of them are Hindus, and about 9% Musalmans. They are distributed unevenly over the province. The average density of population per mile in the Presidency is 160; in Gujarāta 230; in the Baroda State 299; in Kāthiāvāda 150. In Junāgaḍha it is as low as 163, in Surat District 410, and in its Candevi Taluka as high as 865.

The Hindus and even the Mussulmans are divided into numerous castes. The Hindu castes are characterized by a tendency to split into narrowing social groups within which one can marry. In 1901 there were no less than 315 castes in Gujarāta which did not inter dine or inter marry. Many of these connubial groups, some of them consisting of a few families, are on the verge of extinction. Again, among Gujarātīs, males show a tendency to be in excess of females. For instance, the caste of Leva Kunbis, one of the largest and most vigorous of the village stocks, has only 772 females (including widows) to a 1000 males, as against 930 in the Presidency and 950 in India. In some castes a wife is a prohibitive luxury, purchasable only at a price requiring a toil of ten to fifteen of the best years of a man's life. The two tendencies react on each other accelerating the pace of each. Among many castes female infants are got rid of at birth to save the family the almost insoluble difficulty of finding husbands. If allowed to live, they are termed "stones" and treated as such. They are married early, and premature motherhood and savage midwifery complete their physical ruin, if widowhood does not relegate them to a dreary and unproductive life.

Whereas, in old days, the Gujarātis were divided into higher and lower castes, modern conditions divide them into the town stock and the village stock. The fastidiousness and refinement which has been creeping into our town life comes in the way of the town replenishing its vitality from the village by free inter-marriage as before. In towns the connubial groups are growing smaller; infant marriage and premature sex life are yet common; widow re-marriage remains prohibited. The results are that small castes are dying out, women are unhealthy and short-lived, and the stock as a whole has been degenerating. But there is a more cheerful side of the picture. Recently formed sub-castes, in a few cases, tend to fuse; inter-caste marriages take place, though they are by no means common; the age for marriage has risen. Common system of education, unified intellectual life, urge towards social reform and political power have been creating uniform standards of life. Schools and colleges, clubs and professions, political, social and other public work and life in gaols as political prisoners provide powerful crucibles for melting diversity of habits. Restriction on inter-dining is all but gone. The physical welfare of women, at many places, is almost assuming the form of a first charge on the social conscience. Enthusiasm for physical culture has also captivated young men in towns during the last ten years; and in hundreds of akhādās, they seek to re-acquire the racial fitness which their fathers had lost.

Town Stock

The village stock of Gujarāta—for instance, that of the Audicyas, the Khedāwals, the Anāvils, the Rajputs, the Patidars, the Kunbis—is sturdy and virile. Infant marriage prevails in the villages but in name. Premature sex life is unknown. Except among the higher castes, widow re-marriage is freely allowed. But with every generation a foolish sense of social superiority expresses itself by narrowing the group within which inter-marriage can take place, and social customs decrease the number as well as the vitality of the woman. Here, as elsewhere, pride goeth before destruction. Progress in the villages is comparative-

Village Stock ly slow, particularly as men living in towns show a tendency to sever their relations with the members of their caste living in the villages. However, the ancient process of raising the status of castes has been revitalised. Some members of a caste receive education, or, by change of occupation, acquire better economic advantages, or are taken by some preacher of Ārya Samāja into its progressive fold and a whole caste adopts more refined habits and purer religious forms, claiming a higher status. In living memory instances are available where potters have by this process been accepted as masons, ironsmiths and sweepers as Kshatriyas, bards as Brāhmanas. And at each remove, the caste attains a higher grade of social well-being. Of late, the influence of Mahātmā Gandhi is also being felt, indirectly but none the less vigorously. A party of young ardent Gandhi-ites has come into existence in many backward castes. It strives to ameliorate the social and economic conditions of their fellow castemen. They introduce the charkha, fight the curse of drink, and resist social evils. Their work is made easier than that of the social reformers of an earlier generation; for, in the villages of Gujarāta, the name of the Mahātmā opens all hearts and disarms all opposition.

The same problems, more or less, affect the Mussalmans in the villages, whose ways of life are not far removed from their Hindu neighbours. But the recent tension between the two communities has a pronounced tendency to make them drift apart in matters social and cultural. Under the existing conditions of India, racial intermixture between them on an appreciable scale is inconceivable. The Parsis form a small community mostly living in towns, vigorous and wealthy. Their race problem will, therefore, scarcely influence the problem of Gujarātis as a whole.

PREFACE

This complex problem, so far as it is likely to affect the culture of the Gujarātīs, may be shortly stated. The basic racial stock of Gujarāta is powerful and tenacious, and has shown an extraordinary range of adaptability in the light of modern conditions. The foreign settlements can absorb a large number of Gujarātīs, but, apart from them, the undeveloped tracts in the province, if opened up, can easily maintain a fairly large increase in population. The more serious problem, however, is to break up the connubial groups, to stimulate a speedier inter-mixture of castes, to encourage an increase in the number of healthy women, and to change the customs which would deny them the privilege of motherhood. Particularly, progress must be speeded up in towns by a co-ordinated, purposive effort towards the consolidation and strengthening of advanced castes before the disintegrating forces destroy the finest elements of the race. "Endogamy is played out" says Prof. Hobhouse rightly. By inter-marriages on an extensive scale alone can the Gujarātīs attain the race vigour which fore-runs great creative impulses. To be great, Gujarāta must be racially homogeneous and fit.

The next aspects to be considered are (a) the social and cultural problems which confronted Gujarāta in the past and the agencies which solved them, and, (b) the changes made by modern conditions in these problems and the new agencies now at work.

The problems which faced Gujarāta in the past were :
Socio-cultural Problems How to resist the agencies working for disruption, and how to absorb the alien influences which from time to time threatened its culture?

This rich and fertile province was always a tempting prize for conquerors. In the later half of the reign of Siddharāja and the earlier half of that of Kumārapāla Gujarāta was politically one; and so was it in the reign of Sultan Bahadur Shah; and, again, for a short while under the Imperial Moguls. But, except during these short periods, Gujarāta has been denied political unity. Thi unknown. Except among the higher castes, widow re-marriage is freely allowed. But with every generation a foolish sense of social superiority expresses itself by narrowing the group within which inter-marriage can take place, and social customs decrease the number as well as the vitality of the woman. Here, as elsewhere, pride goeth before destruction. Progress in the villages is comparatively slow, particularly as men living in towns show a tendency to sever their relations with the members of their caste living in the villages. However, the ancient process of raising the status of castes has been revitalised. Some members of a caste receive education, or, by change of occupation, acquire better economic advantages, or are taken by some preacher of Ārya Samāja into its progressive fold and a whole caste adopts more refined habits and purer religious forms, claiming a higher status. In living memory instances are available where potters have by this process been accepted as masons, ironsmiths and sweepers as Kshatriyas, bards as Brāhmaṇas. And at each remove, the caste attains a higher grade of social well-being. Of late, the influence of Mahātmā Gandhi is also being felt, indirectly but none the less vigorously. A party of young ardent Gandhi-ites has come into existence in many backward castes. It strives to ameliorate the social and economic conditions of their fellow castemen. They introduce the charkha, fight the curse of drink, and resist social evils. Their work is made easier than that of the social reformers of an earlier generation; for, in the villages of Gujarāta, the name of the Mahātmā opens all hearts and disarms all opposition.

Village Stock

The same problems, more or less, affect the Mussalmans in the villages, whose ways of life are not far removed from their Hindu neighbours. But the recent tension between the two communities has a pronounced tendency to make them drift apart in matters social and cultural. Under the existing conditions of India, racial intermixture between them on an appreciable scale is inconceivable. The Parsis form a small community mostly living in towns, vigorous and wealthy. Their race problem will, therefore, scarcely influence the problem of Gujarātis as a whole.

This complex problem, so far as it is likely to affect the culture of the Gujarātīs, may be shortly stated. The basic racial stock of Gujarāta is powerful and tenacious, and has shown an extraordinary range of adaptability in the light of modern conditions. The foreign settlements can absorb a large number of Gujarātīs, but, apart from them, the undeveloped tracts in the province, if opened up, can easily maintain a fairly large increase in population. The more serious problem, however, is to break up the connubial groups, to stimulate a speedier inter-mixture of castes, to encourage an increase in the number of healthy women, and to change the customs which would deny them the privilege of motherhood. Particularly, progress must be speeded up in towns by a co-ordinated, purposive effort towards the consolidation and strengthening of advanced castes before the disintegrating forces destroy the finest elements of the race. "Endogamy is played out" says Prof. Hobhouse rightly. By inter-marriages on an extensive scale alone can the Gujarātīs attain the race vigour which fore-runs great creative impulses. To be great, Gujarāta must be racially homogeneous and fit.

The next aspects to be considered are (a) the social and cultural problems which confronted Gujarāta in the past and the agencies which solved them, and, (b) the changes made by modern conditions in these problems and the new agencies now at work.

The problems which faced Gujarāta in the past were :
 Socio-cultural Problems How to resist the agencies working for disruption, and how to absorb the alien influences which from time to time threatened its culture?

This rich and fertile province was always a tempting prize for conquerors. In the later half of the reign of Siddharāja and the earlier half of that of Kumārapāla, Gujarāta was politically one; and so was it in the reign of Sultan Bahadur Shah; and, again, for a short while under the Imperial Moguls. But, except during these short periods, Gujarāta has been denied political unity. This challenge of history has been met by Gujarāta by the development of an irresistible individuality, by uniformity of social customs and institutions, by deliberately organised movements of thought and action, and by literary and cultural unity.

Political Consolidation under a single government is, and will remain, a dream. British Gujarāta is not sufficiently large to make a separate autonomous province, nor would separation from Bombay be anything but a disaster for it. But, on the other hand, if it continues to be a part of the Presidency as now, there is the danger of Gujarātī states in Kāthiāvāḍa, Rajputana and Central India Agencies drifting further apart. Neither British nor state policy as at present favours any closer political inter-relation, however desirable, between these dismembered parts of Gujarāta. In such a matter one can only look to the Gujarātīs themselves, to its statesmen, its princes, its public men; particularly, to its educationists and literary men who are working for its literary and cultural unity. Under pressure of the idea of a united Gujarāta the genius of the people, under modern conditions, will, perhaps, develop a more efficient harmony than in the past, either by co-ordinating the political, social, and economic activities, or by segregating political influences into the narrowest possible confines. If a universal popular aspiration carries within it the germ of a future reality, the dream may one day come true and a uniform and harmonious political life may undo the wrong of centuries.

The British domination, though the most insidious of all the conquests which brought foreign cultures with them, has produced far-reaching results. In the name of peace, it disarmed the people of India, and under the guise of liberating the intellect, tried to uproot the foundations of society and indigenous culture for a time. And the Āryan culture had to assume varied forms to meet the emergency created by it. Theosophy, Ārya Samāj and enlightened orthodoxy, Saṁskṛtic revival and the resulting literary renaissance, and wave on wave of surging religion-tinted nationalism absorbed the energy of the advancing tide of foreign culture while rejecting its deleterious elements. And in the comprehensive impulse which Mahātma Gandhi generated, in Satyāgraha, in the re-assertion of Ahiṁsā and Satya as absolute values in life, Gujarāta emerged as the embodiment, the voice, the spirit of triumphant Āryan culture as expressed through modern conditions. Periods, dominated by ideals and heroic action have often been known to alter fundamentally the outlook of races. And it is not unnatural to expect that post-Gandhian Gujarāta will continue to represent some great aspects of Āryan culture at their best.

Further, this impact of India with the West has proved creative, altered conditions, and reshaped Āryan culture itself. In the past the conditions were generally unsettled; social habits and forms were held together by the unity of unreflective influences; and the ideology was mainly drawn from Samskr̥tic sources. During the last century, however, the straight waistcoat of enforced peace has brought its compensation in the shape of commercial and cultural advancement and of a burning desire for reorganisation. Contact with the great living currents of European culture has brought forth a sturdy renaissance. The unreflective processes have been replaced by deliberate, collective action and purposive efforts towards a fuller life. And the vast resources of modern civilization have brought an intensity and speed unknown to human endeavour before.

The most powerful of the unconscious processes of the past, in Gujarāta as elsewhere in India, was caste-consciousness. It included consciousness of one's own caste as the fixed orbit in which the life was predestined to move, belief in cātura-varṇya as the divinely appointed harmony of functional groups, and loyalty to the guidance of the Brāhmaṇas. But, now, it has undergone an important change in Gujarāta. Aggressive individualism declines to treat men only as means to any social purpose, however divinely ordained. Cāturavarṇya as an eternal structure attracts the faith of only a diminishing minority. The Brāhmaṇa priest is looked upon more as a monopolist to be jealous of, or a dependent to be grudgingly patronised. The caste has lost its plenary authority. As it is to-day, with its funds and conferences, its journal and perhaps its tiny volunteer corps, it is looked upon by its member as one's own little party to be fiercely proud of and to be used against the snobbery of other castes; as an instrument of power and influence; as a first object of generosity and patronage. Feeble attempts at fusion of sub-castes into the four major castes have proved unavailing. In the place of the old harmonious confederation of castes, we have a multitude of conflicting social groups. Emptied of the idea of inter-dependence, Cāturavarnya has lost its raison d'être; without a faith in custom, its divine origin and Brahmanical guidance it can never possess the vitality to re-organise society.

Behind this blatant individualism lies the respect for human personality, originally a Greek idea popularised by Christianity; but it has been curiously blended with the spirit of toleration and Ahimsā as understood in Gujarāta in the nineteenth century. And Truth, as defined by the Mahātmā, has added aggressiveness to it. Satya, as finally determined by one's personal conscience is, with thousands who follow him, an inviolable little kingdom. Castes dare not invade it. Young men offer Satyāgraha by picketting, fast, and non-co-operation against infant marriages, caste dinners, marriage processions and ancient bridegrooms, reducing the fiats of the caste to harmless thunderbolts. Luckily, so far the process is found workable only by the young and progressive, and non-violence and willingness to suffer take the sting out of its coerciveness.

Caste-consciousness is not likely to disappear, nor are castes likely to cease to be social units for a very long time to come; but both are being altered to suit new and potent group ideas.

Clubs, associations and professions, as also political and other public activities, provide social contact outside rather than inside the caste and render the ties of caste subsidiary. Among the new group sentiments in Gujarāta the most powerful are Gujarāta-consciousness and nationalism.

Narmad, in the sixties, was the first to dream of the former. He passionately sang of 'Glorious Gujarāta'; so sang Nanalal of 'Blessed Gujarāta', and with similar passion sang Khabardar in one of his best poems written from his life-long exile in Madras. "Where lives a single Gujarātī there is Gujarāta for ever. Where Gujarātī is spoken, there is Gujarāta for ever and for ever."

"A society is an organism" says Fouille in his La Science Sociale Contemporaine "because it has been thought and willed; it is an organism born of an idea." The truth of this proposition can be seen in the process by which the idea expressed by Narmad has attracted to itself the volume of sentiment which belonged to caste-consciousness. Conscious efforts are made to-day by Gujarātīs wherever they live to unite themselves under the determining influence of this conception. And a new Gujarāta is coming into existence.

Nationalism, the most powerful sentiment inspiring Gujarāta since 1930, has also been wonderfully blended with Gujarāta-consciousness. Gujarātīs in every part of India have tried to participate in the national struggle, because, as Gujarātīs, they have thought it both a duty and an honour to do so. In a country so vast as India nationalism can only flourish on the strength of such a hierarchy of group sentiments, provided, of course, the minor is included in the major.

An equally great change has come over the family idea which, with all its incidents, formed the basis of the Āryan social life. Joint family is going from Gujarāta; at places it has gone. Not even Govardhanram's full
The Family Idea some praise could restore its vitality. Of the many causes which wrought this change, the noteworthy are the individual traits of the Gujarātī and the influence of women. The Gujarātīs have been comparatively less subservient to hardening custom and narrow prejudice. Family life has rarely been so inflexible as in other parts of India. Culture has never come to be monopolised by aristocrats, intellectual, social, or military.

Gujarātī women, again, have been comparatively free. And with the increase of the influence of the new woman, the walls of the joint family have been, stone by stone, falling. Polygamy went out of fashion in the higher castes, imperceptibly, without an effort. The old-world, one-sided bhakti of the wife for the divine lord and master is a thing of the past. Love has come, seen and conquered. Wedded life is being invested with romance. Co-education in elementary schools was common in the past, and Gujarātī opinion in modern times has set its face against segregated education in schools and colleges.

The active participation of women in all walks of life has not been unknown in the past, and is an ordinary feature of modern life. Minaladevī who ruled Gujarāta during Sidharājā's infancy, Anupumadevī who assisted her husband Tejahpāla, and Mirānbāi, the poetess, were not creatures of fiction or freaks. Widows and mothers have frequently carried on the family business. And in modern times a period of less than a generation has seen them taking their legitimate place in many walks of life. Some have been in the forefront of the Satyāgraha movement, risking all; many have braved lathi charges or risked picketing in areas full of strife and bloodshed. The illiterate peasant women of Bardoli in 1928, and again in 1930, exhibited fortitude, courage and determination to suffer in the cause of their country, which have few parallels in history. The women of the cities have not been slow in the race. For instance, one can be seen dominating the public life of a large city; another controlling labour in a great industrial centre; a third organising a big semi-commercial concern on patriotic lines; a fourth guiding a political organisation of women; and many working and organising in their respective spheres of public activity. The women of Gujarāta have thus won a status in public life equal to men before the world knew how it was done. The old ideals also have not lost their vitality. Freedom has neither affected their gentleness, nor their devotion to domestic life. Most of the patriotic women who worked or suffered for politics during the last four years continued to remain obedient wives, affectionate mothers and ungrudging

Position of women.

ing housewives ever ready to serve. Smt. Kasturba Gandhi, the foremost woman of Gujarāṭa, is a piece of heroic antiquity at its best. Before her sublime surrender to her husband's fiery will to suffer, the Purāṇic sātīs look inane and lifeless.

The traditions on which the Purāṇic view of life was based have not yet lost their hold, but a new meaning and content is being given to them. The Brāhmaṇa priest has passed his sceptre to the teacher, the literary man and the patriot. The Sāṃskṛtic revival has swept away Purāṇic superstitions and sectarian beliefs only to restore direct contact with the best in Sāṃskṛtā. Premānanda's Dhruvākhyāna has been forgotten, but poems, dramas and novels based on Purāṇic subjects never fail in their appeal. Sarasvatīchandra, disregarded as a romance, lives as an anthology of Āryan literature and thought. Stotras strung with the names of gods no longer affords solace as does the study of the Bhagavadgītā. Vedānta has lost its charm, and so have rituals; religious emphasis is being transferred from belief and worship to service and experience. Bhakti has no passionate adherents; they seek life as joy, or heroism, or stern tapas. The tradition of continuity maintained by the Purāṇas does not satisfy the Gujarāṭi mind to-day, but it seeks to revive and interpret the race memory by building up a new tradition to suit modern needs. Deeds done and ordeals undergone by heroic Indians, who in the past stood for the ideals which now fascinate the mind, are celebrated in song and legend.

Ethical, religious and spiritual ideals have always been modified in Gujarāṭa to suit its temperament. High spirituality and learning have been always neglected in favour of a practical application of moral principles. Gujarāṭa has been the home of magnificent temples and charitable and philanthropic institutions. In old times, the Jain sādhu, the humble purāṇika and the village bhakta brought solace and help to the poor and the distressed. To-day, many young men and women have given up careers to organise and uplift the masses. Ahinsā has, at all times, leavened corporate life.

For ages there has been scarcely a town or a large village without its sadāvrata to feed the poor, its panjrapol to house maimed cattle. Kumārapāla and Hemcandra made of it a political doctrine. The wealthy to-day have given expression to it in hospitals, orphanages and sanatoria. It has been harnessed to political energy in the interest of India's freedom, and of the peace of humanity. Ahinsā, forgetting its morbid solicitude for the ant and the sparrow, has grown into an active creed of service, a cult of resistance to evil by non-violent means through sacrifice and suffering. But Gujarāta prefers the joy of life to ascetic rigour. The high-browed Brāhmaṇa and the stern sādhu have come and gone. Akho taught all the horrors of this fleeting world. Mahātmā Gandhi's gospel of renunciation may hold its soul in temporary subjugation. But Gujarāta will make money and spend it on the arts of life; her sons and daughters will live and laugh, and love and sing joyfully.

Joy of Life

I am deeply obliged to Mahātmā Gandhi for his kindness in contributing a foreword to this work and to Dr. A. B. Keith and Ācārya Dhruva for their appreciation of it. My cordial thanks are also due to several friends for their encouragement and assistance in making the completion of this book possible. I am also grateful to the Government of Bombay and the officials of different jails in which I happened to be for their unfailing courtesy in giving me the necessary facilities for writing the book, and to Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., Ltd., for the promptitude with which they undertook to publish it.

K. M. MUNSHI

26, Ridge Road,
Bombay, 5th March, 1935.

CONTENTS

	PAGES.
Foreword by Mahātmā Gandhi 	v
Preface 	vii

PART I

PRĀKṚTA, SAMSKṚTA AND APABHRAṆŚA

(A. C. 200?—1297)

CHAPTER I

Gujarāta : The Land and the People 	1-9
--	-----

CHAPTER II

The Āryan Colonies of the West : Their Language and Literature (A. C. 500) 	10-25
---	-------

CHAPTER III

The Kingdom of Gurjaratrā and the Localisation of Forma- tive Influences. (A. C. 500-1000) 	26-35
---	-------

CHAPTER IV

Hemacandra and his Times (A. C. 961-1200) 	36-47
---	-------

CHAPTER V

Apabhraṇśa Literature 	48-61
---	-------

CHAPTER VI

Someśvara and his Times (A. C. 1173-1297) 	62-73
---	-------

CHAPTER VII

A Retrospect of the Period 	74-79
--	-------

PART II

OLD GUJARĀTĪ (1297-1852)

CHAPTER I

A Century of Chaos : Old Gujarātī and its Early Litera- ture (1297-1400) 	83-100
---	--------

CHAPTER II

Padmanābha and the Heroic Poetry in Old Gujarātī 	101-111
--	---------

CHAPTER III

A New Gujarāta and the Purāṇic Movement (1400 — 1600) 112-124

CHAPTER IV

Bhakti : Mirān and Narasinha Mehtā 125-149

CHAPTER V

Popular Fiction (1360–1652)	150–172
-------------------------------	-----	-----	-----	-----	---------

CHAPTER VI

Akho and the Gospel of Other-worldliness ... 173–185

CHAPTER VII

Premānanda (1636–1734)	186–206
------------------------	-----	-----	-----	-----	---------

CHAPTER VIII

The End of Old Gujarāṭa: Dayārāma (1767-1852) ... 207-225

PART III

MODERN GUJARATI

(1852 to 1934)

CHAPTER I

A New Age and its Literature (1852-1885) ... 229-250

CHAPTER II

The Samskr̥tic Revival and its Pioneers (1885–1914) ... 251–271

CHAPTER III

Achievements of the Samskr̥tic Revival (from 1888) ... 272-306

CHAPTER IV

Mahātmā Gandhi and the Triumph of Āryan Culture ... 307-323

CHAPTER V

Modern Tendencies, Part I: Munshi (1914–1934) ... 324–343

CHAPTER VI

Modern Tendencies, Part II (1914—1934) ... 344-374

[illegible]

APPENDIX

Gujarātī Prosody	381
Bibliography	383
Index	385

Bibliography	383
--------------	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----

Index
-------	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----

MAPS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. Mīrāṇbaī	Frontispiece
2. Modern Gujarāta (Map)	Facing p. 1
3. Physical Map of Gujarāta	„ p. 2
4. Āryan Colonies of the West (Map)	„ p. 10
5. Pre-Cālukyan Gujarāta (Map)	„ p. 26
6. Gurjara Bhūmi under Sidharāja and Kumārapāla (Map)	„ p. 36
7. Hemacandra	„ p. 38
8. The Sultanate of Gujarāta (Map)	„ p. 112
9. Narasinha Mehtā	„ p. 136
10. Premānanda	„ p. 186
11. Narmad	„ p. 238
12. Mahātmā Gandhi	„ p. 308

NOTE

By a curious oversight the words 'in blank verse' are left to stand at p. 283, l. 25 where they should have been 'in rhymed verse'—K, M,

11

CHAPTER I

GUJARĀTA : THE LAND AND THE PEOPLE

Linguistic boundaries—North Gujarāta—South Gujarāta—Kāṭhiāvāḍa—Kaccha—area and population—geographical determinants—maritime activity : ancient and modern—soil and productivity—general characteristics.

A modern poet of Gujarāta sings :

“Blessed, oh ! blessed is the holy land,
Our great Gurjara Deśa” ; ¹ and rightly too. For it is no longer the land of commerce and industry only. It is the land of Mahātmā Gandhi, as once it was of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Under the guidance and inspiration of his great soul, it is becoming the home of a race forging its greatness on the anvil of a mighty and singular spiritual struggle.

I

Roughly speaking, Gujarāta occupies an important part of the western seaboard of India from Sindha to Bombay. The term Gujarāta is, in effect, used in two different senses : firstly, to denote the mainland between Mount Ābu and the river Damaṇagaṅgā ; and secondly, the much larger language field in which Gujarātī is spoken. In the latter sense, Gujarāta’s northern linguistic boundary touches the states of Sīrohī and Māravāḍa where Māravāḍī is spoken, and includes the districts of Thar and Parkar in Sindha, as also Kaccha. Kaccha, for cultural and literary purposes, has always been regarded as a part of Gujarāta. The southern boundary extends far beyond the Damaṇagaṅgā, and includes parts of the Thānā District and the islands of Salsette and Bombay where Gujarātīs and the Mahārāshtrīyans live side by side, each group speaking its own language. The eastern boundary runs along the state of Dharamapura, joins the eastern frontier of Pāṇapura, and extends along the Ārāvali hills, partly enclosing within it the Bhil settlements in which the dialect spoken is largely influenced by Gujarātī. Further east, beyond the region of the Bhils, lie the eastern and southern parts of Rājputānā with Jaipurī and Mālvi as their dialects. Both these dialects are closely allied to Gujarātī, the Bhil dialect forming a sort of connecting link between the two.

1 धन्य हो धन्यज पुण्य प्रदेश !
अमारो गुणीअल गुर्जर देश !

Gujarāta consists of sub-provinces, which in some respects are different from one another. They are: (i) North Gujarāta, the mainland between Mount Ābu and the river Mahī; (ii) South Gujarāta, the mainland between the Mahī and the Damaṇagaṅgā; (iii) the peninsula of Kāthiāvāḍa; (iv) Kaccha; (v) the Bombay tract to the south of the Damaṇagaṅgā up to and inclusive of the island of Salsette and Bombay, where Gujarātī is partially spoken.

North Gujarāta, in very early times, was called Ānartta, this being the name of an eponymous king of mythology. In c. A.C. 700 it was included in the kingdom of Gurjjaratrā of which Bhīnamāla or Śrīmāla, near Mount Ābu, was the capital. With each succeeding century the name Gurjjaratrā or one of its variants, Gurjjara Bhūmi, Gūjjara Maṇḍala or Gurjara Deśa, came to be applied to territory farther and farther south till in A.C. 1141 it included Dohada, and in A.C. 1191, Godhrā in the district of Panch Mahals. Later, the old Ānartta came to be known as Gujarāta, and even now the local pride of North Gujarāta will not allow that any other part is Gujarāta except their own home.

In different mythical periods South Gujarāta bore different names. Originally it was known as the land of the Nāgas; then it was called Anūpadeśa; afterwards, Śūrpāraka. Later on and up to c. A.C. 900, the land south of the river Narmadā, including the island of Bombay, was known as Aparānta and included in the Dakṣiṇapatha. From about c. A.C. 150, the tract between Khambhāta (Cambay) and Narmadā acquired the name of Lāṭa, which, thereafter, came to include the country south of the Narmadā up to the Damaṇagaṅgā. Under the Caulukyās of Aṇahilavāḍa Pātāṇa (A.C. 961), the name Lāṭa was gradually displaced by the name Gurjara Bhūmi. In A.C. 1222 Gurjara Deśa extended up to Dabhoi on the north bank of the Narmadā. In A.C. 1384 the author of Karmavipākasaṃgraha includes in Gujarāta, Nāndoda on the south bank of that river. The whole of Lāta up to Damaṇagaṅga became part of Gujarāta in c. A.C. 1400. The Sultans of Ahmedabad consolidated their kingdom under the name of Gujarāta, thus demarcating it from the surrounding parts which they could not conquer. This gave the kingdom a name and solidarity, and to the people a life different from that of their neighbours.

Kāthiāvāḍa was originally the Kūśāvrata of the myths, and subsequently came to be known as Surāshtra or Saurāshtra. The latter name still clings to one of its parts which is called Sorath. In some of the Purāṇas, it is included in Ānartta. Under the Cālukyas it was sometimes included in Gurjara Bhūmi, as is clear from the definition गूर्जरः सौराष्ट्रदि. Akbar included it, together with North and South Gujarāta, in his province of Gujarāta; and all the three provinces have since formed one indissoluble social and cultural unit.

Kaccha has always been known by that name and, though politically separate, its fortunes have invariably been linked with those of Gujarāta.

Thāṇā, Salsette and Bombay, together with Lāta, were one country till c. A. C. 900; and though they formed part of the Sultanate of Gujarāta for a short time only, the Gujarāti speaking races continued to occupy them. During the British period, the Gujarātis have, by their intelligence and enterprize, their wealth and culture, made many parts of this tract integral parts of Gujarāta.

II

The area of Gujarāta proper is a little over 100,000 sq. miles, and the number of people speaking Gujarāti in the Presidency of Bombay is about 9,270,000, distributed in the following manner: City of Bombay 236,000; Bombay Suburban Division and Districts 22,000; Northern Division 2,747,000; Central Division 72,000; Southern Division 20,000; Sindha 76,000; Bombay States and Agencies.

4,230,000; Baroda State 1,867,000.¹ The above division will also show how a compact country has been politically cut up, part being British India, and the rest parcelled out among several Indian states. Gujarāta, off and on in the past, was a political and administrative unit. That it should be a unit appears undoubtedly an extremely desirable goal. But for the present, the Gujarātīs have to rest content with the unity that runs only through their life and culture. Like many other provinces of India distinguished by the dominance of a single language, Gujarāta is an independent social and cultural entity. Each of such provinces possesses a common stock of thoughts, feelings and ideals set working by the early Āryans in India and acquired and transmitted during the course of history peculiar to itself. These provinces even now employ, as they did in the past, the structure, wealth and tradition of Samskr̥ta for their fuller literary expression, throb with common ideals and cherish a common will. Thus, India has for centuries realized what to many nations is yet a dream: a fundamental national and cultural unity expressing itself through the diversity of independent and free provincial life and literature. These provinces have, through centuries, waged an unceasing war against the centrifugal forces tending to disrupt this unity, and in spite of apparent divergencies, the history of their literature stands out as a triumphant assertion of the unity of India.

III

The nature of the life and literature of a country depends mainly upon its geographical peculiarities, the economic factors which create or develop common interests and aptitudes among its inhabitants, and the cultural influences which glisten through the fabric of the political and religious institutions giving them a living unity. These determinants impose the national character upon the people and upon all that they do and express.

1. These figures are based on the Census of 1921. The Census of 1931 was largely boycotted by the Gujarātīs on account of the Civil Disobedience Movement, and does not form a reliable guide. It would however be a fair estimate to allow at least a 10% of increase in the population within the last decade.

The principal geographical feature of Gujarāta is its undisturbed coast line. In fact, the sea is just a few miles distant from its eastern boundary, and this proximity to the sea has been responsible for the ceaseless mercantile and maritime activities of its people. Some of the ports of Gujarāta date back to the dawn of history, and have, at one time or another, acquired international importance. Through them, trade and commerce brought in riches which overflowed the land. From them, streams of enterprising colonizers went out to distant lands. Kuśasthalī (Dwārikā) was a port through which perhaps the Paṇis of Ṛgveda, doubtfully identified with the Phoenicians (Paniks-Punic), carried on an international trade. Māhishmatī of Sahasrārjuna and Śūrpāraka, (Sopārā) the Ophir of the Old Testament, were sea ports of considerable importance. The Jātakas record the maritime importance of Bhṛgu-kaccha (Broach) from c B. C. 600. All later history shows how till c A. C. 1700 this city was the great entrepôt which maintained India's commercial intercourse with the world.

Ptolemy (A. C. 140) mentions Verāvala, Māngrola, Porbandara, as large ports; these even now carry on considerable sea-borne trade. Under the Cālukya and the Vāghelā kings of Gujarāta (961-1297) the ports of Ghoghā and Khambhāta (Cambay) rose to great prominence. The former was the base of the royal fleet. The latter outgrew Broach in international importance and was the resort of merchants from every part of the globe. The early Portuguese traders called its merchants 'their keenest rivals, their merchantmen their richest prizes'. Under the Moghul Emperors, Surat became the premier port of the country. Before the British came, the flag of Gujarāta could be seen flying in eighty four ports, twenty-three of which were on the western coast, and the rest in foreign lands. During the British rule, Bombay, which as far as its trade and commerce are concerned, is largely Gujarāti, and Okhā and Beḍi in Kāthiāvāḍa have come into prominence,

The maritime activity of Gujarāta was not restricted merely to commerce. So early as c. B. C. 500, Prince Vijaya sailed from Simhāpur (Sīhora) near modern Bhāvanagara and settled in Ceylon, which had, since then, a close maritime intercourse with Bhrgukaccha and Śūrpāraka. According to Vividha-tīrtha-kalpa, a princess from Ceylon built a Jaina temple at Broach, and the well-known proverb of to-day “लंकानी लाडी ने घोघानो वर”—the bride of Ceylon and the bridegroom of Ghoghā—apparently has had its origin in some long-forgotten incident. There is evidence of the Gujarātis, in c. A. C. 200, having brought presents by sea from China; of Indian ships, presumably Gujarātī, having plied in Persian and African ports in c. A. C. 100; and of Hindu settlements having existed in Sokotra about the same time. Naushirvan, (A. C. 531-574) the great Sassanian monarch, invaded Sindha with a fleet manned by sailors from Kaccha. Hiuen Tsiāng (A. C. 630) records that the people of Saurāshtra occupied themselves with commerce.

In the seventh century, a ruler of Gujarāta, forewarned of the impending doom which was to overtake his kingdom, sailed away with his followers from his native soil in six large and a hundred small vessels to lay the foundation of a new civilization in Java. Gujarāta maintained a colony there, and the wealth brought from Java has become proverbial. જે જાય જાવે તે કદી ન આવે; ને જો આવે તો પરીજાનાં પરીજાં ચાવે ઘટલું ધન લાવે. He who goes to Java never returns; but if he does, he brings so much wealth that his grandchildren's grandchildren will not exhaust it. Friar Oderic (A. C. 1321) voyaged across the Indian Ocean in a vessel manned by Gujarātis; and Gujarātī sailors, according to the authority of Vasco-de-Gama, knew how to guide their ships not only by the stars but by nautical instruments of their own. The Sultāns of Gujarāta proudly bore the title “Lords of the Sea”; and the Sanger Rajputs of Kaccha and Navānagara were well known for their skill in ship-building during the Sultanate. The East India Company, in c. A.C. 1735, found in Dhunjibhai of Surat, a master architect of ships. Early in the nineteenth century, Motisā, a Jain merchant, owned the largest mercantile fleet in Bombay. Today, Gujarātī merchants are to be found in many parts of the globe, and the only large steamship company in India is the result of Gujarātī enterprise. But, for want of a national government, the maritime power and glory of Gujarāta which had endured through centuries are no longer hers.

These persistent activities of the people of Gujarāta through the ages led to the rise among them of a well-to-do middle class which dominated social life, influenced politics, laid down traditions and shared with kings the patronage of literature. Acquisition of wealth became an important if not the sole end of life, and the display of it a great virtue. Heroism and intellectual pursuits, not being thought conducive to the acquisition of wealth, were not assessed at any great value. The cosmopolitan spirit of this class, born of international intercourse, did not favour an ascetical or exclusive outlook on life, but fostered the instinct of adaptability and catholicity of spirit. Social inequality was based as much on wealth, as on birth or education; and the cultural level constantly tended towards uniformity. As a further result, life in the whole province became dynamic. The people gained vast experience and a wide outlook on all matters. Foreigners came to settle among them and were in time absorbed into the community. Neither the feudal nor the intellectual aristocracy was powerful enough to check this endless process of levelling and adjustment. Women waited on masters who were neither fierce warriors nor proud panditas, and in southern Gujarāta particularly, acquired great freedom, sharing with men the burden of life and exerting their influence on the environment in a manner unknown in other provinces of India.

IV

The soil of the mainland, watered by the rivers Tāpī, Narmadā, Mahī and Sābaramatī, is rich and varied, makes agriculture a lucrative pursuit, and in years with a good rainfall, gives to almost the whole of the rural area more than enough to live on. As large tracts were under cotton cultivation even in pre-British days, the cotton industry flourished in towns and villages which poured out their products into distant lands, including Great Britain. The peasantry consequently has always been shrewd, intelligent and, to some extent, cultured ; and, of late, has been the most actively political-minded group of its kind in the world. Till recently, prosperity through commerce, industry and agriculture has prevented any very great disparity between the economic, religious or cultural level of the urban and rural areas. The man of commerce aspires to be a landlord ; the agriculturist comes to the city or crosses the seas in search of trade profits and on his return invests his savings in land. These conditions, however, do not exist in Kāthiāvāda or Kaccha, where the towns are mere camps of ruling chiefs and the villages are the homes of a hard working and oppressed peasantry.

V

The above features moulded the national characteristics and tastes. Popular imagination centered round the hero of commerce returning from foreign lands in vessels laden with riches ; round the moral and the peaceful ; round the charitable, the philanthropic and the worldly wise. The relentless valour of great warriors, the undying passion for one's city or religion, the stern, unwavering steadfastness with which the mighty in courage or intellect adhere to the ideals of their race or civilization had few admirers. The soil was unfitted for a Śaṅkara or a Caitanya ; it could not produce a great lover like Caṇḍīdāsa.

These general traits took different colours in different areas. Even the author of Kuvalayamāli (c. A. C. 779) saw this difference and expressed it thus :

There I saw the Gurjjara people. They have strong bodies ; are nourished on ghee and butter ; are devout, clever in negotiations ; and speak 'nau re bhallaun'. Then I saw the people of Lāṭa. They part their hair ; they besmear their bodies with scent ; their bodies are beautiful to look at. They speak 'amhe kauin tumham'.¹

1 'वयलोणिय पुट्टगे धम्मवरे संधिविग्गहे निउणे ।

नउरे भल्लउं भणिरे अहपेच्छइ गुज्जरे अवरे ॥

ण्हाओलित्तविलित्ते कयसीमंते सोहियंगत्ते ।

अम्हं काउं तुम्हं भणिरे अहपेच्छइ लाडे ॥'

This distinction between North and South Gujarāta remains true after twelve hundred years. The people of the north, generally, are serious-minded, steady, religious and of heavy build; those of the south are pleasure-loving, possess a greater sense of humour and enjoy life. And this distinction again has led to the rise of two distinct currents of literature: the one, conservative, intellectual, sombre, puritanic; the other, progressive, light, rich in humour, and vivacious.

The people of Saurāshtra display their outstanding characteristics except where centuries of diplomacy or tyranny have destroyed their spirit. They are strong and bold, with unforgotten traditions of a warlike past, hospitable, generous and impulsive. These men have given to the folklore of Kāthiāvāḍa its romantic charm and its burning passion. Those who follow mercantile pursuits, though less catholic, refined and sentimental than their brothers of the mainland, are hard-headed and calculating. The people of Kaccha share the same traits in a large measure and, in addition, possess a rare spirit of enterprise and a wonderful instinct for business organisation.

CHAPTER II

THE ĀRYAN COLONIES OF THE WEST: THEIR LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE (A. C. 500)

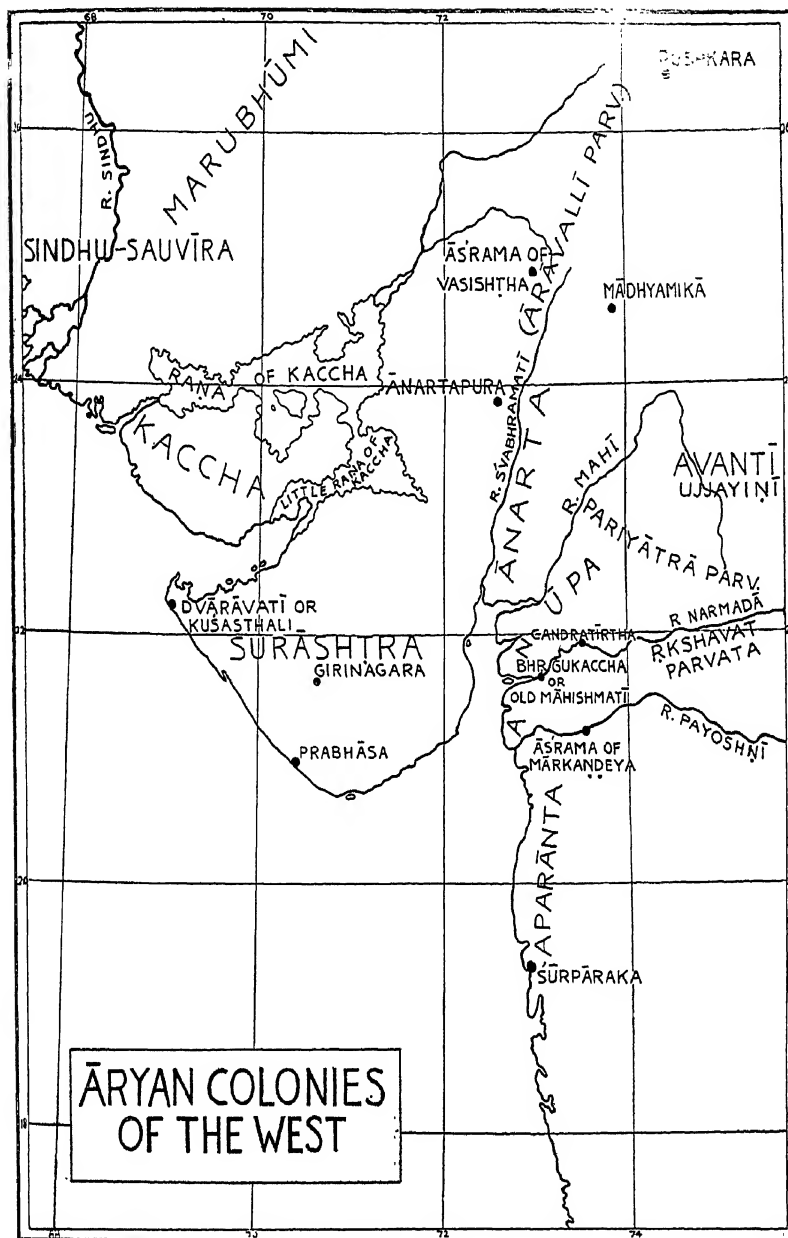

Early Āryan occupation—(...to A. C. 500) Traditional accounts—Sahasrārjuna and Haihayas—Bhṛgu—Yādavas—Mauryas (B. C. 319–197)—Greeks (B.C. 180–100)—Western Kshatrapas (c. B. C. 70 to A.C. 398)—Guptas (c. A. C. 390–467)—The āśramas and Āryan culture—Āryan centres—Ābhīras—Their origin and status—Āryan influence under Guptas—Language—Āryans of the Outer and Midland Bands and their dialects—Prākṛtas—Apabhraṁśa—Their evolution—Early Jainism—Dharmakathā—Tarangalotā, a social dharmakathā.

Who were the original dwellers of the land which is now known as Gujarāta? When did the Āryans come and settle in it? These are interesting questions, and to help us in answering which we have no more than fragmentary references in the Purāṇas. The first Āryan conqueror from the north who raided the country up to the Narmadā found the Nāgas already in occupation. Who the Nāgas were it is difficult to say. Perhaps, the Bhīls, Meenas, Gonds, Chodhrās, Kolis, Dhodiās and Dublās who are to be found, among other places, in the Surat District and at the foot of the Ārāvali, are the descendants of these long-forgotten occupants of early Gujarāta.

I

The first wave of Āryan immigrants, perhaps, consisted of the Śāryātas, a tribe claiming descent from Manu, and the Bhṛgu, the martial priests who claimed their descent from the sage Bhṛgu. The myth runs that the eponymous Śāryāti, and Cyāvana, the Bhṛgu, found a home in this distant land.¹ The son of the former, Ānartta, gave his name to North Gujarāta. Perhaps, Ānartta also was the name of a tribe; and Ānarttapura (Ānaṇḍapura, Modern Vaḍanagara) was one of the earliest centres of Āryan culture. Cyavana's āśrama was situate on the banks of the Narmadā, possibly near Rājapīplā, if what Yudhishtīra was told on his pilgrimage to these parts had any element of truth in it. The Bhṛgu had Bhṛgutīrthas on the Narmadā. The next wave of immigrants settled in Kāthiāvāda, where Haryaśva, a Yādava king, founded a kingdom. Girinagara, (Junāgaḍha) Kuśasthali and Prabhāsa were the earliest Āryan settlements in the peninsula.¹

1. Vishnu IV. 1. 1. Matsya XVIII. 12. 22. Harivaṁsa. 1. 10. 29, 31.

Later, Sahasrārjuna Kārtavīrya of the Haihaya race, a branch of the Yadus, a great conqueror, turned his attention to this land. The Haihayas probably represent the race classed by Sir George Grierson, in his theory of Indo-Āryan Languages, as the Outer Band of Āryans in contradistinction to the Midland Āryans of the Punjab and the Gangetic valley. Kārtavīrya did not like the pretensions of the Midland Āryans who were laying the foundations of small states and a great civilization in the north. Once, the myth runs, he killed the sage Jamadagni, a Bhṛgu of the Midland and an associate of the great Viśvāmitra, and drew upon himself the wrath of his son, the fierce Rāma. This dauntless young warrior, worshipped for generations under the name of Paraśurāma as a teacher of the martial art and as the sixth incarnation of Viṣṇu, vanquished his father's murderer, razed Māhishmatī to the ground and promoted Āryan settlements on the Narmadā. Kārtavīrya's empire, for such it was, included Anūpa and Ānartta (South and North Gujarāta), Saurāshṭra (Kāthiāvāda), Avanti (Mālvā) and Śūrasena (Mathurā), thus clearly indicating that these outlying provinces formed a homogeneous group of colonies originally occupied by the Āryans of the Outer Band.² The myth that Paraśurāma, in no less than twenty-one campaigns, destroyed all kings is suggestive of the incessant war which the Bhṛgu had to carry on against the Haihayas. In his old age, the warrior made Śūrpāraka his home, and brought in his train the culture of Āryāvarta.

1. Harivaṁśa 11. 37, 38.

2. Munshi, Mahishmatī of Kartavirya. Ind. An. XLV. 217.

Nothing definite is heard of Ānartta or Saurāshṭra till we come to the period of the great Bhārata war between the Kurus and the Pāṇḍus. Some decades before that epoch-making conflict, the Yādavas of Śūrasena rose against their king Kaṁsa of Mathurā. Kṛṣṇa, the young Yādava hero, killed him. Later, fleeing before the wrath of Jarāsaṁdha, the king of Magadha and the brother-in-law of Kaṁsa, the Yādavas came to these hospitable colonies, led by Kṛṣṇa and his brother Baladeva. In Ānartta and Saurāshṭra, they ultimately settled. Ugrasena ruled his kingdom from Dwārikā with the aid of Kṛṣṇa, who very soon came to be regarded as the supreme representative of Āryan culture and statesmanship.

The Vanaparva of the Mahābhārata contains a narrative of Yudhisṭhira's pilgrimage through Gujarāta. When the eldest son of Pāṇḍu visited the land, he found Aparānta, the sea-board to the north of the Narmadā, studded with Āryan colonies. Mārkaṇḍeya had an āśrama or hermitage on the Payoshnī, identified by some with the river Tāpī; the Bhṛguś had āśramas on the Narmadā. During the war, all eyes turned to Dwārikā's great statesman for bringing about a decisive issue. The Yādava heroes, with their unruly tribesmen, took part in the great war, and returned home only to destroy each other in the superabundance of their might. A few miles from Prabhāsa in Kāthiāvāḍa, a spot is still shown where Śrī Kṛṣṇa fell, pierced by an arrow. Tradition has hallowed the spot; a venerable tree throws its kindly shade over it; a small river flows sluggishly by to join the sea. But no one has cared to surround the spot with a fitting monument worthy of one held to be an incarnation of God and undoubtedly one of the greatest heroes known to human tradition.

The succeeding centuries are a blank till we come to the records of the Mauryan empire of Magadha. Possibly Candragupta Maurya (B. C. 323-298) brought both Ānartta and Saurāshṭra within the fold of an empire dominated by Āryan influences from Madhyadeśa. Buddhism and Jainism obtained a foothold in these parts a little later. Aśoka (B. C. 272-232) ruled over Saurāshṭra through a Greek governor, Yavana Thera by name. His edicts (B. C. 240), inscribed on a rock, can still be seen as one climbs to the top of Mount Giranāra from Junāgaḍha.

After the break up of the Mauryan empire (B. C. 197) these distant provinces were raided by Menander (B. C. 126), the Bactrian King of Kabul, known to Buddhistic literature as Malinda. He occupied Sindha and Saurāshṭra. The first century after Christ saw a Scythian chief with the title of Kshatrapa (Satrap) occupying Saurāshṭra. Kshatrapa Nahapāna (A. C. 78-120) ruled over Gujarāta; but it soon passed into the hands of the Āndhra king Gautami-putra Śātakarṇi. This champion of Brahmanism as well as of Buddhism at one time held sway over the whole country watered by the Godāvari, and also over Berars, Mālvā, Gujarāta and North Konkaṇa. During this time, South Gujarāta came under the active influence of the Deccan.

Soon after Gautami-putra's death, about A. C. 128, another satrap wrested Mālvā and Gujarāta from the hands of his son. Rudradāman I (A. C. 143-158), grandson of the great Satrap Cashtana, ruled over Ānartta, Anūpa, Kaccha, Saurāshṭra, Avanti, Maru, Sindhu-Sauvīra and Aparānta, that is over South Rajputānā, Mālvā, Gujarāta including both Kāthiāvēda and Kaccha, and North Konkaṇa. Once again, Kārtavīrya's empire was revived and put together by the conquering arms of a foreigner's Āryanised grandson. Rudradamān I was learned and accomplished, and recorded his greatness in Saṁskṛta on the Giranāra rock which already bore Aśoka's inscription.

The Śaka Kshatrapas ruled long over Gujarāta, bowed before the overpowering might of Samudragupta (c. A. C. 380), the greatest of conquerors known to Indian history, and were destroyed by Candragupta II (c. A. C. 390). Candragupta, who proudly bore the title of Vikramāditya, ruled Gujarāta from Ujjayinī, the seat of an intensely fostered Saṁskṛtic culture. Gujarāta, for a century, remained an integral part of an empire which stood for Āryan culture in all its aspects. On the very rock near Mount Giranāra which bore the inscriptions of Aśoka and Rudradāman, Skandagupta's viceroy of Gujarāta, Parnadatta, recorded his master's victory over the Huns (A. C. 456). Skandagupta died about A. C. 467 and the Guptas lost the province of Gujarāta soon after.

II

Though these colonies, Ānūpa, Ānartta, Saurāshtra, Kaccha and Aparānta were administered by Madhyadeśa only intermittently, they were always dominated by Āryan culture. The early Āryan settlers brought with them their own civilization, and always looked for fresh inspiration to the home of their ancestors. They married the daughters of the aborigines freely and imposed their superior civilization on those with whom they so mingled. Later waves of Āryan immigrants came from different parts of North India and settled in these colonies; but each of them retained its exclusive corporate existence though evolving, with others, a common life on the Āryan model. In convenient centres, adventurous Ṛshis established their hermitages—āśramas—which preserved the high traditions of Āryan life in all its purity. There the Ṛshis lived, their character, learning and ideals their only source of power and influence, uplifting, unifying, and radiating Āryan ideals in thought, word and deed. These āśramas were the strongholds of civilization. They flourished in an unbroken chain all over India, and maintained living contact with each other and with the seats of learning in the Gangetic valley and in the forests of Brahmāvarta and Naimisha, where new ideals of life and thought were being brought into existence by great sages.

It is difficult to describe this culture within the limits of a few sentences, though the life and literature of India have owed so much to it. It consisted of rituals and myths; of modes of life and canons of conduct; of traditions; of a wealth of language and literature; of great theories and living ideals. Among other things, it consisted of the following:

(1) a sense of historic continuity, preserved through a belief in the Vedas as the source of all inspiration, giving to all races, of whatever origin, a conscious unity of life and history;

(2) a mythology embracing sacred legends of rivers and mountains, cities, royal houses, semi-divine heroes and sages, which made the past a vital heritage to succeeding ages ;

(3) a family life dominated by strong patriarchal traditions, affording shelter to every needy and helpless member, and, as a corollary, imposing strict regard for feminine virtue which helped to preserve the purity of race and culture ;

(4) a social theory based on a respect for the Brāhmaṇas, who as a class stood for learning, culture and self-control, permitting a new-comer to benefit by, but never to destroy social privileges, and offering scope to the uncultured to rise in the scale of life, but never so fast as to jeopardise its stability ;

(5) Samskr̥ta, a language perfect in structure and elastic in expression, with a rich, varied, beautiful literary achievement, the living embodiment of the cultural ideals of the race ;

(6) one unchanging, supreme code of ethical values running through what appears to be a diversity of religious beliefs, which insisted on the observance of the great vows—mahā-vratas—of non-violence, truth, non-stealing, continence and non-possession ;

(7) a faith in human endeavour, self-discipline (saṁyama), and asceticism (tapas) in order to realise the Supreme Self in this life ;

(8) in religious and spiritual matters, an emphasis laid on individual experience and becoming rather than on belief and scriptural word ;

(9) and lastly, an unwavering faith in the sacred Āryāvarta, the holy land of the Āryans, leavened by an abiding veneration for those who lived and died so that Āryāvarta may live one, indivisible, eternal.

The Ṛshis called this culture 'dharma', which generally means a sum-total of all sentiments, beliefs, values and activities which make life, literature and country worth living for. And the effort which it made for self-expression through adverse circumstances, is the central theme of Indian history during the last three thousand years.

From the beginning of their occupation of India, the Āryan's hold over the country was more cultural than either political or economic. It was a conquest made by men who, generation after generation, created or studied literature, sacred or profane, at Benares, Taxila, Nalanda, Mathurā, Ujjayinī and a hundred similar places; who lived under trying, if not well-nigh impossible conditions, and gave to the people, in return for a meagre maintenance, religion, ethics, literature, mythology, and above all, a self-conscious cultural unity. The problem before them was the absorption of the foreign, the depressed and the backward elements of society around them into the fold of their civilization. Since the day when the mythic Śaryāti put his foot in this land, successive generations of such men have largely Āryanised this province.

Girinagara, Ānarttapura, Prabhāsa and Candratīrtha (Cāndoda) attracted Brāhmaṇas from all parts of the country. Ujjayinī, a great distributing centre of culture, always dominated Gujarāta. There was an āśrama of Vasishtha near Ābu, of Kapila near Siddhapura, of Bhṛgu on the Narmadā, of Mārkaṇḍeya on the Payoshnī.

But Gujarāta was far away from Madhyadeśa, and the culture she received, suffered both in purity and rigidity in the process of transplantation. The Mahā-bhārata states that the Kshatriyas of this land had lost their status as they had no Brāhmaṇa to perform the ritual so very essential in the life of an Āryan. The Vishṇu Purāṇa enjoined that those who visited Saurāshṭra should undergo purification. Aśoka had evidently regarded a Greek good enough to be a governor of this frontier colony. Non-Brahmanical Āryan doctrines like those of Buddhism and Jainism had found a refuge here. During the rule of the Satrap Nahapāna, the Brāhmaṇas had even accepted Greek women in marriage. The varṇāśrama dharma, recognising only four main castes, was accepted in theory; but, in practice, it gave rise to a system which treated every small autonomous group of settlers as a separate caste, and denied to any one an exclusive claim to superiority. A spirit of tolerance pervaded the social atmosphere. The culture was not of a very high order but evenly distributed. The absence of a large class of orthodox Brāhmaṇas with traditions of learning, as in Bengal or Mahārāshtra, retarded the progress of learning in Gujarāta. On the other hand the bitterness born of caste inequality rarely found a home here.

Among the principal races which occupied Gujarāta, the Ābhīras deserve some attention. Their dialect, Apabhraṃśa, had been recognised as one of the literary languages of Gujarāta before the rise of the Valabhīs (A. C. 509). Were the Ābhīras foreigners? Was their language alien? Patañjali (B. C. 150) regards Apabhraṃśa as the corruption of the normal Saṃskṛta; Bharata (A. C. 200) refers to 'deśabhāṣā' and to Ābhīrokti, the idiom of the Ābhīras, the herdsmen; but there is no evidence of foreign origin in these early references.

There is no doubt that the Ābhīras, a hated people, believed to have once lived on the Indus, were called Mlecchas. They fought in the battle of Kurukshetra. Manu Smṛti treats them as descended from Brāhmaṇas by Ambaśthā women. Whatever might have been their early status, prior to A. C. 100 the Ābhīras lived in Gujarāta without any brand of social inferiority. Periplus (c. A.C. 100) found them already settled in Western India (Abiria). Ābhīra Rudrabhūti (A. C. 181) was a general of the Western Kshatrapas. Īśvarasena, son of Śivadatta, ruled a principality near Nāsika (A. C. 300). Ābhīras lived in Rājasthāna and Mālvā on the western frontier of the Gupta empire in Samudragupta's time (A. C. 360). An Ābhīra dynasty succeeded the Āndhrabhr̥tyas, according to the Vishṇu Purāṇa. All these facts indicate that the Ābhīras occupied an important position in society in Rajputānā, Gujarāta, and even further south, before A. C. 509. Neither their names nor their language appears to be foreign; and even if they were originally foreigners, they were for all purposes children of the soil before the Christian era began. Many scholars believe that the Ābhīras entered India about B. C. 150 and migrated to Gujarāta a couple of centuries later. According to Dr. Keith, they probably belonged to the Dardic branch of the Indian race.

III

For hundred years, Gujarāta formed part of the Gupta Empire. The Gupta period was the golden age of Indian history. Samudragupta, Candragupta II, the Vikramāditya of romance, Kumāragupta and Skandagupta were great, not only as conquerors and statesmen, but as patrons of all cultural activities. Their strong and just administration, more than their conquests, brought about the political consolidation of India north of the Narmadā. Their learning and ideals stimulated the growth and development of culture.

In the Gupta period, the old Āryan myths, known all over the country, were edited and compiled in works which have since become classic. The Mahābhārata was edited, and Purāṇas like the Vāyu, the Harivaṅśa, the Matsya and the Mārkaṇḍeya were composed. The study of law and ritual, science and philosophy, ethics and religion received great impetus. The old literature on these subjects was revised, in some cases, standardised; Manu, Yājñavalkya and other law texts were revised or composed; astronomy, mathematics and medicine were assiduously cultivated; and architecture, sculpture and painting reached a high level of artistic expression. Saṃskṛta, already the medium of intercourse for the cultured in the whole country, became the great unifying agency; the vehicle, the source, and the inspiration of culture in its manifold aspects; and the symbol of Āryan unity. Literary expression, too, reached its climax in the kāvyas, epics, and the nātakas, dramas. Kālidāsa, one of the world's great literary artists, lived, as is now accepted by many eminent authorities, at the court of Candragupta II, Vikramāditya; and his Raghuvāṅśa, Meghadūta, and Sākuntala were accepted in India as specimens of literary art in its most perfect form. The worship of Viṣṇu became the state religion, and the Brāhmanical view of Āryan culture, the dominant note in the nation's life. During the period seats of learning were lavishly endowed. So far, racial unity and the common heritage of culture were the two ties which bound the Āryans together ; to them, was now added political unity. Though there is very little contemporary evidence, subsequent history fully bears out that these influences deeply affected life and literature in Gujarāta ; and it is more than probable that towards the composition of the Harivaṃśa, the Matsya, and the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, the people of Gujarāta made no small contribution.

IV

Most of the languages of India have grown up in one and the same way. Age after age, in each province, the dialect of the Āryans for the time being began to be developed intensely owing to the introduction of the vocabulary, the construction and the graces of Saṃskṛta which the cultured Āryans of Madhyadeśa spoke. The dialect thus cultivated soon lost touch with the deśabhāṣā, the actual speech of the people. The deśabhāṣā, however, developed along well-recognised phonetic principles ; and, when necessity arose, was in its turn made the object of literary culture. Thus the Prākṛtas, the Apabhraṃśas, and the present vernaculars were the deśabhāṣās which, in succession to one another, attained literary form.

According to Sir George Grierson, there were two waves of Āryan immigration : one, which he calls that of the Āryans of the Outer Band, the other, that of the Midland (Madhyadeśa) Āryans. In course of time, the speech of the Midland Āryans became Saṃskṛta, and from time to time it lent its structure and wealth of diction to the dialects of the Outer Band. Under this influence, the different Prākṛtas, Apabhraṃśas and vernaculars came into existence.¹ The basis of the languages thus evolved was Outland, and the body, Midland. The base of the grammar adopted was the vernacular, and the enrichment was due to attempts made to simplify the literary language by using its vocabulary.²

If by the word deśabhāṣā is meant literally the language of the soil, the dialect actually in use as distinguished from

1. Grierson, Indo-Aryan Languages, Sanskrit ; Prakrit. Encyclo. Britannica.

2. Keith, History of Sanskrit Literature 34.

the language of literature, the evolution of the different Indian languages can easily be reconstructed. The language of the Rgveda is the first literary form of the primary deśabhāṣhā—the dialect of the early Āryans of Madhyadeśa—which has come down to us, and the dialect itself may be presumed not to have been far removed from it. Perhaps the Śāryātas and the Bhrgus spoke this primary deśabhāṣhā. The dialect of the Yādava heroes must have been its later variety, fast growing into Saṃskṛta. We are, however, on firmer ground in the third century before Christ. Aśoka's edict, intended for popular instruction, is inscribed on rocks at Mount Giranāra, Sopāra near Bombay, and Dera Dun in the western variety of the primary deśabhāṣhā. The inscriptions, scattered all over North India, show that the dialects spoken at the time were similar to one another.

The secondary deśabhāṣhās were also sub-divided into Māhārāshṭrī, Śaurseṇī, Māgadhi and Paisāci according to the province in which the variety was spoken. The first three are found in Saṃskṛta dramas. The Śaurseṇī variety, resembling Saṃskṛta and spoken in Madhyadeśa around Mathurā, was put in the mouth of ladies and the vidūshaka, the clown, by the rules of the drama. This Śaurseṇī prevailed in Gujarāta, as also perhaps the other varieties of Prākṛta known as Ardha-Māgadhi, Jaina Māhārāshṭrī and Jaina Śaurseṇī, the last two so named because of the activities of the Jaina sādhus. The redaction in Jaina Māhārāshṭrī of the Jaina canon, at Valabhīpura in Kāthiāvāḍa, by the conference presided over by Devardhigaṇi (A. C. 500), indicates that this form of the language was favoured by the Jains.¹

¹ There is no doubt that in this period the deśabhāṣhā in Gujarāta was influenced not only by Māhārāshṭrī but the then prevailing Kanarese. An ancient Tamil tradition includes Gujarāta in the Panca Dravida or five Dravidian regions. Possibly it dates back to a time when South Gujarāta, or Lāta, had been included in Gujarāta but not yet brought under the dominance of the northern influences. It is likely, as Professor Turner suggests, the ancestor of Marāṭhi was further to the north in Asoka's time and that it was pushed south by the speakers of the ancestor of Gujarāṭi. So late as the ninth century A. C. Kanarese was spoken over a large part of Māhārāshṭra and the Māhārāshṭrī was not the principal language in the present Marāṭhi-speaking area. This would explain the traces of Kanarese in the Gujarāṭi language, vide J.B.B.R.A.S. 1930, p. 95, Master, Some Parallelisms in Indo-Aryan and Dravidian Languages.

These Prākṛtas soon drifted away from the deśabhāṣā, which came to be known as Apabhraṇśa, the corruption of the norm. This popular speech, as opposed to Saṃskṛta and Prākṛta, was first made the object of literary culture by story writers. Hence arose the literary Apabhraṇśa, sometimes referred to as the language of the Ābhīras. For every secondary Prākṛta, there was a corresponding Apabhraṇśa, and a variety of the Śaurasenī Apabhraṇśa prevalent in Gujarāta about A. C. 1000 is called by Mārkaṇḍeya (A. C. 1450), Gaurjarī. This Apabhraṇśa in its turn became the object of literary culture; and the deśabhāṣa continued to develop on phonetic lines, evolving the tertiary deśabhāṣā, Gujarātī. Thus, age after age, the spoken language was intensely cultivated under the influence of Saṃskṛta, as also of the literary language of the preceding age which had ceased to grow, achieving for itself a new stage in literary expression.

To summarise the position of languages in Gujarāta during the period under review: A late variety of the primary deśabhāṣā of the Āryans was in vogue about 200 B. C; Saṃskṛta, soon thereafter, became the literary and official language; Jaina Māhāraṣṭrī Prākṛta was used by the Jaina sādhus in the fourth and fifth centuries, A. C; Śaurasenī Apabhraṇśa, the spoken language of the people, was growing into a literary language from about the same time. King Guhasena of Valabhī (A. C. 559-569), according to an inscription, wrote poems in Saṃskṛta, Prākṛta and Apabhraṇśa.

V

From early times the Jaina sādhus became a cultural force in Gujarāta. Madhyadeśa and Magadha had no home to offer them; the schools of Āryan learning were deeply absorbed in solving questions of high philosophic and religious moment, and in making an advance on the system of philosophy and ethics from which Mahāvīra had borrowed his negative creed. Royal patronage was extended mainly to the Brāhmaṇas and the Bauddha bhikṣhus; the great imperial house of the Mauryas did not feel any attraction for Jainism. The imperial Guptas, devout worshippers of Viṣṇu and ardent conquerors as they were, were not likely to admire a sect which spelt destruction to their masterful policy. The Jaina sādhus, celibates pledged for life to ceaseless travels and bent on the propagation of their faith, were, therefore, forced to explore more hospitable lands, and went south and west.

They turned for patronage and protection to Gujarāta with its cosmopolitan spirit and its poverty of great intellectual and literary tradition. Its rich middle-class longed for some literary entertainment which, without putting an undue strain on its religious zeal, could give a sense of spiritual security. Denied the patronage of highly cultured or literary audience, the Jaina sādhus specialised in a form, which could conveniently be utilised at once as a means of religious propaganda, and a source of popular entertainment. The Brāhmaṇas, to whom the literary and intellectual impulses of Mathurā, Kāśī and Nalanda were the very breath of life, and whom royal patronage had made independent of popular support, on the contrary, showed an interest only in the kind of literature which accorded with the higher standard prevailing in Madhyadeśa. They manifested no inclination to stoop to conquer the simple-minded or the idle rich of this distant colony.

Dharmākathā—religious story—is the category under which will fall many forms of literature to which the Jaina sādhus devoted themselves. The common element in all these kathās was an insistence on the purity of Jainism, and on the greatness of the gospel of renunciation under every circumstance. One of the sections of the Jaina scriptures is called Dharmakathā-anuyoga.

The Jainas turned classical legends, legendary lives of saints, moral tales and anecdotes into dharmakathās in order to spread their doctrine. Often, the epic legends were re-written to suit this propaganda; more often, a Purāṇic hero's life-story was re-told, making him a Jaina. These kathās based on legendary biography were called caritas. Vāsudevacarita was first composed by a Jaina teacher of Candragupta Maurya (c B. C. 320), and Paumacariyam, the Jaina version of the Rāmāyaṇa, and Harivaṃśa, by Viṃśa in A. C. 300,

Romantic stories were also utilised for writing dharmakathās. Haribhadra (A. C. 750) acknowledged his indebtedness to pre-existing kathās, and, following ancient teachers, divided them into (i) Dīvyā, (ii) Dīvyamānusha and (iii) Mānusha. He himself classified them into (i) Arthakāma, (ii) Saṁkīrṇa and (iii) Dharmakathā. The general public, as was perfectly natural, took a fancy to the kathās in which love was the central motive. The Jaina sādhu knew human weaknesses well. The author of Vasudevahindi insisted that dharmakathā should be properly diluted with good love-stories in order to achieve the best results. Udyotana laid down that a story should be like a newly wedded wife, decked with ornaments, auspicious, moving with graceful steps, sentimental, soft in speech, and ever pleasing to the minds of men.

The dharmakathā, with this object in view, was given a peculiar turn in Gujarāta. The stories of kings did not appeal to the commercial classes; but the social dharmakathā, dealing with the love affairs of a nagara śeṭha, or a wealthy man's daughter, with acquisition of wealth as a substitute for heroism and renunciation according to Jaina tenets as the end of life, caught the popular imagination.

VI

Some fragments of a social dharmakathā of the period before A. C. 500, survive to give us an idea of what these kathās must have been like. Tarangalolā, or Tarangavati, was composed by Pādalīpta, born in Kośala, a protégé of the Śātavāhana kings of the South, and the founder of Palitāṇā in Kāthiāvāḍa, one of the places of Jaina pilgrimage. It was written in Prākṛta, contained many deśī words, and was mentioned in Anuyogadwāra (A. C. 500). Various authors, from the eighth century downwards, have extolled the story and compared it to the Ganges. Śīlācārya says that a story which lacks any trace of this kathā has neither art nor beauty. Again, another unknown author is surprised that the god of death should escape with an unbroken head when he carried away Pādalīpta! The original work is lost, and its merits can be judged only from a summary in 1,644 gāthās composed, evidently by a process of very careful editing, by Nemicandra, and recently brought to light by Dr. Ernest Leuman. This short kathā shows how later authors of such kathās inartistically developed some elements of Pādalipta's tale without producing its charm. It is pre-eminently a love story of middle class life, in the poetic style of the period, full of delicate touches and refined sentiments, and, but for its depressing conclusion, a thing of beauty.

In Magadhā, a young and beautiful Jaina nun goes to the wife of a nagara śetha for alms. She preaches the usual religious precepts, and, on being asked, tells her life-story to justify her early renunciation. Her original name was Tarangavatī. She was a daughter of the nagara śetha of Kauśāmbī, brought up in luxury, educated with care, and beautiful as the carṇpaka flower. Once she went to a garden, and, seeing cakravāka birds, the Indian symbol of undying love, on the lake, she swooned. Her friends revived her, and asked her what had caused her to faint so suddenly. Tarangavatī told them the story of her previous life: how she had been a cakravāki, and had lived with her mate on a lake in Angadeśa; how their love had transcended all earthly bonds; how a hunter, trying to shoot an arrow at an elephant bathing in the lake, had missed his mark and killed her mate; how, bewailing the loss of her beloved, she had immolated herself on the fire lighted by the repentant hunter to cremate the poor bird; and how, on seeing the birds sporting on the lake, the past had flashed upon her.

Once the past was recalled, Tarangavatī wanted to meet the lost comrade of her former life. In her grief at not being able to find him, she found solace in drawing pictures depicting the experiences of her former bird-life, and exhibiting them. The cakravāka, born as a son to a rich merchant in the same town, saw the pictures, recollected his past, and, remembering his beloved, fainted. The lovers were soon brought together, but their parents objected to the match. Elopement was the only way open to them, and the lovers resorted to it. They sought refuge in a forest; were attacked by a gang of robbers; and were carried away to be offered as sacrifice to the goddess Kālī. But one of the robbers heard the story of their past life, recognised them as the very birds whose death he had caused in his past life when hunting an elephant, and allowed them to escape. From the robbers' camp, they ran away to a town, where their identity was discovered. The parents received them with open arms; and twelve months of unalloyed happiness followed.

The story, elaborated with consummate art, is at this stage made to subserve a religious purpose. Life cannot and must not be anything but an ordeal. The lovers meet a sadhu who tells them the story of his past. They recognise in him the hunter who had been the cause of their death in their former life, and the robber who had helped them to effect their escape. Dire truisms on life's futility follow. They leave love and happiness and mourning relatives behind them, and take to a life of renunciation inculcated by Jaina precepts. Each goes a different way. The story closes on a conventional note. Everybody expresses horror at the sinful ways of the world, the only refuge from which is the Jaina religion.

The story has the elements of romance so dear to Indian hearts: the inseparable cakravāka birds and the ideal of undying love running through a succession of lives. Both are depicted with a charm difficult to meet with in later social kathās. The cakravāka episode, even in the form in which it has come down to us, is one of the most beautiful in Indian literature.

CHAPTER III

THE KINGDOM OF GURJARATRĀ AND THE LOCALISATION OF FORMATIVE INFLUENCES.

(A. C. 500-1000)

The Huns—Valabhīpura kings (509-766)—The Cāvaḍās—Kingdom of Gurajaratrā (c. 400-953)—the Gurjaras—Segregation of cultural forces—Sanskṛta literature—Kāvya—Nāṭakas and Campūs—Bhaṭṭi (c. 641)—Māgha (c. 700)—Jainism—Early Jain literature—Haribhadra (c. 750)—Samaraicā Kahā—Udyotana (779)—Kuvalayamālā—Siddharshi (c. 906)—The influence of Sanskṛta.

Skandagupta appears to have lost Gujarāta a few years after the date of his Giranāra inscription (456). With his death (467), the Gupta empire fell. The Huns under Toramāṇa entered India, (c. 465) established themselves at Pavaiyā in the Punjab¹, and finally reached Ujjain (c. 500). Yaśodharman defeated Toramāṇa's son, Mihirākula (c. 533), and became the master of Western Mālvā, which thenceforth became an independent kingdom.

Senāpati Bhaṭṭārka defeated the Maitrakas (509), and ruled over a kingdom consisting of Saurāshtra and a part of Ānartta from his capital, Valabhīpura (modern Valā)². When Hiuen Tsiang visited it (640), it was a city of power, wealth and culture, and contained a large library of sacred books. The fame of its university had reached China; for Sthiramati, a Buddhist monk, in the beginning of the sixth century, and another Guṇamati, at the end of the same century, were invited to China. Śaivism and Buddhism were the favoured religions, and the temples of these faiths were richly endowed. The Valabhī kings are considered to be Gurjaras,³ or Maitrakas,⁴ and are generally classed as foreigners. But Senāpati Bhaṭṭārka defeated the foreign invaders and founded Valabhīpura, rich with classical influence. His descendants bore

1. Udyotana, Kuvalayamālā.

2. Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. I, 87.

3. op. cit. 5.

4. Smith's Early History of India, 332.

the title of 'Paramamāheśvara'. His dynasty administered the country on Gupta lines. Dhruvasena, his descendant, (640) was a Kshatriya and the son-in-law of Śrī Harśa. All these facts, together with many others, do not exclude the probability of Senāpati Bhaṭṭārka being a rebel general of the Guptas,¹ who took advantage of the general confusion to carve for himself a little kingdom out of his master's empire. His descendants ruled over it till c. 766. About that time it was destroyed, according to some authorities, by Arabs from Mansura.

A scion of a small tribe, Vanarāja Cāvaḍo, founded Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa (c. 765), destined to become the capital of Gujārāta. The importance given to Vanarāja by later Jaina sādhus has given him a place in tradition perhaps far beyond what appears his due.

North Gujārāta was at this time a part of the kingdom of Gurjaratrā. Its capital Bhīnnamāla, or Śrīmāla, lies about fifty miles west of Mount Ābu. Tradition dates its origin from c. 166, but it really came into prominence in c. 500. Its Brāhmaṇas, sādhus and warriors were mainly responsible for the culture and the power which made Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa so famous. Prior to 400, there are traces of a Gurjara kingdom²; Gurjara feudatories, presumably subject to this central authority, ruled at Broach from 580 to 734. Śrī Harśa's father fought (c. 600) with Gurjaras who were allies of the Huns. The Gurjara kingdom, in Hiuen Tsiang's time (640), extended over Rajputāna and North Gujārāta. The author of Kuvalaya-māla, who composed his work in 779, refers to Bhinnamāla as situated in the beautiful Gurjara Deśa. Gurjaratrā, or Gurjara Bhūmi, included part of Jodhpura in 844, and Alwar in 960.

With this kingdom are associated two questions of great importance to the history of this period: Whether the Gurjaras were foreigners; and whether the name Gurjara denoted merely the ruling family, or embraced the people over whom these rulers held sway. According to the theory

1. Vaidya, History of Medieval Hindu India, Vol. I, 245.

2. Vide Gaurisankara Oza, Rajputānakā Itihāsa, Pt. I.

accepted by some authorities, the Gurjaras were a foreign race which entered India c. 400-500; took kindly to Indian culture, founded the kingdom of Gurjaratrā, accepted the Hindu caste system; conquered Ānartta and Lāṭa in c. 700; subdued the Valabhī kings in c. 750; and abandoned Bhinnamāla in c. 953 to go and settle in Ānartta, and to make their chief, Mūlarāja, king of Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa¹. Another theory treats them as Āryans who merely used the name of their country, Gurjaratrā, to distinguish themselves from the neighbouring peoples.² It is equally probable that a ruling clan which called itself Gurjara gave their kingdom the name of Gurjaratrā, the kingdom in its turn giving its name to its population.

For our purposes, the important facts are: that Gurjaratrā from c. 500 was an Āryan kingdom; that its capital was a seat of Āryan culture; that there is no evidence to prove that the Gurjara Gauda Brāhmaṇas, the Śrīmāla Brāhmaṇas, the Poravāḍa and Ośavāla Kshatriyas, and the corresponding Vaiśyas were of foreign extraction; and that in 640 Hiuen Tsiang found the king a devout Āryan. There is no doubt that the kingdom of Gurjaratrā localised Āryan culture, and the linguistic and literary influences of Āryāvarta, so as to evolve in the fulness of time the cultural unit now known as Gujarāta. About 953 Gurjaratrā, which since c. 816 was ruled from its new capital, Kanauja, was broken up. Bhinnamāla was abandoned, and 18,000 families migrated to different parts of the country.

During this period, the Karṇāṭaka Cālukyas under Pulakeśi (611) of Badāmī, and then the Rāshtrakūtas of Decan occupied part of Aparānta and Lāṭa up to the banks of the Narmadā. The latter were overthrown by Tailapa of Mānyakheta (978), the great Karṇāṭaka monarch, who ruled it through a governor from Broach. Lāṭa to the north of the Narmadā, was first ruled from Ujjain, then by Gurjara feudatories from Broach, and later by Rāshtrakūtas.

1. D. R. Bhandarkar, Foreign Elements in Hindu Population. I. A. XL, 21; Gurjaras J. B. B. R. A. S. XXI. 413.

2. Vaidya, History of Medieval Hindu India, I. 83,

II

Indian culture of this period was in the keeping of kings, and the localisation of political forces, after the disruption of the empire of Śrī Harśa (c. 647), easily led to a segregation of cultural and literary influences, and in consequence, to a development of provincial characteristics. In the sixth and the seventh centuries, the memory of a glorious past embodying the ideal of an indivisible Āryavarta, the Vedas, Saṃskṛta and its inspiring literature, the Brāhmaṇas, and the sects of Buddha and Mahāvīra were unifying forces, stimulated and strengthened by Indian rulers, notably the Guptas and Śrī Harśa. But distinctive geographical determinants, the non-Āryan elements which varied with every province, and the conceit, ambition or jealousy of every petty conqueror acted as disruptive forces which tended to divide the country. The inter-action of these forces was responsible for a phenomenon bewildering to the foreign historian: an Indian national consciousness alternating or co-existing with a strong provincial feeling; people in different parts of the country, under the influence of a common life and culture, exhibiting many characteristics of a single nation, and yet reduced by the ambition of ruling princes to no more than a mere conglomeration.

During the early part (600-800) of this period, when the Āryan colonies were marked off into the kingdoms of Gurjaratrā and Valabhīpura, Bhīnnamāla¹ and Ānandapura became active centres of Aryan culture. Śūrparaka and Ujjayinī also influenced South Gujarāta.

The period under review was one of the most fruitful in Saṃskṛta literature; for it was in this age that great epic and dramatic works were composed, grammar and rhetoric were studied, law and philosophy were developed. And Saṃskṛta became the most powerful of influences operating on the culture of the people. It was the language of the court, of literature, of the highest thought and the noblest ideal. It impressed its genius upon Gujarāta, and prevented it, in spite of its fluid social and commercial life, from developing on any but Āryan lines.

1. It produced the famous astronomer, Brahmagupta (born 598), the author of Sphutāsiddhānta (628).

The works of Kālidāsa, Bhavabhūti and Bāṇa, which fascinated literary men all over India, served to set a standard that goaded them to produce works possessing varying degrees of merit. Literary efforts were naturally directed to the kāvya, or the epic, the rupaka, or the drama, and the campū or the romance.

The kāvya owes its rise to the great epics, the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata. It is a refined and polished epic, dominated by one sentiment, dealing with the adventures of a royal hero, or a royal family; and literary art shows itself at its best in the descriptions contained in it rather than in the narrative as a whole. The tradition of the kāvya, compact in form, elegant in expression and classic in self-restraint, which Kālidāsa left behind him, had naturally undergone a change for the worse on account of the excessive importance given to description. Bhāravi, prior to 600, made the kāvya a vehicle for illustrating grammar. The poet, anxious to win the praise of the pedant, turned a grammarian, and made a great language the victim of well-nigh ineradicable artificiality.

Bhaṭṭi, who composed Rāvaṇavadha under the patronage of Dharasena of Valabhī (c 641), carried forward the traditions of Bhāravi. The adventures of Rāma were employed by him to produce an elaborate story, and unrestrained fancy was allowed free play, resulting in the grotesque. About 700, Māgha lived at Bhīnnamāla. Bhaṭṭi's influence can be traced in his S'isupālavadha, which, in spite of defects common to the times, ranks among the best kāvyas in later Saṃskṛta literature, and abounds in elements which make it a good epic.

Lāta appears to possess distinctive literary traits. A kind of style, favoured by the authors of Lāta, had acquired the name of Lāṭī. Rājasekhara represents the people of

Lāta as preferring Prākṛta and hating Samskr̥ta.¹ Humour was then another peculiarity of Lāta.²

III

The Jaina sādhus were very active during the five centuries under review; but the record of their activities has to be examined with caution.

The later Jaina sādhu has preserved this record. Whatever he wrote, his disciples studied, and the libraries of Jaina temples in Gujarāta preserved. When orthodoxy surrenders its treasures to the printing press, the history of Jainism, of Prākṛta, Apabhraṃśa and Gujarātī will have to be written anew. But works, published so far, have made considerable contribution to the history and the literature of the period. They are of great linguistic and sociological value; but, except for the biographical details of the writer and his teachers and the record of reigns, they contain unreliable historical material. The material preserved is disconnected, one sided, or, in some cases, even distorted by religious bias; it is drawn very often from popular Jaina traditions; it sometimes conflicts with facts authenticated by contemporary records; and it creates a false historic perspective. But such as it is, it is sufficient to provide a correct estimate of Jaina literary activities.

About A. C. 500, Brāhmanism and Buddhism dominated Saurāshtra and Gurjaratrā; but Valabhīpura was hospitable enough to welcome the conference of sādhus which redacted the Jaina canon, thereafter called the Valabhī Vācana.

Jainism, like Buddhism, was an offshoot of Āryan thought. Neither Mahāvīra, nor his disciples, ever claimed to teach any but an Āryan creed; and the doctrine of re-birth, the supremacy of the five great vows, the efficacy of detachment, vairāgya, and the goal of final emancipation, kaivalya, which they taught were essentially Āryan doctrines. Though Jainism did not attract

1. पठन्ति लटमं लाटाः प्राकृतं संस्कृतद्वयः ।

2. Siṃhadeva, Commentary on Vāgbhatta.

लाटी हास्यरसे प्रयोगनिपुणै रीतिः प्रबंधे कृता ।

a large Brāhmanical following, the Jaina sādhus were very often drawn from that class. About the first century of the Christian era, many of its great missionaries were learned Brāhmaṇas, whose ambition was to see that their doctrines acquired a place of honour among the learned in the land.

Vimala's Paumacariyam, written in Jain Māhārāshṭrī Prākṛta, was one of a large number of attempts to alter the Rāmāyana to suit the needs of the Jainas. Works like Nandisūtra, composed about the time of the Valabhī redaction, show that the religious and literary activities of the Jaina sādhus were influenced by the Vedas, the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyana, the Purāṇas, the well-known systems of philosophy, the Arthaśāstra of Kautilya and the Kāmasūtra. Jainism was only one of the cultural achievements of Āryāvarta, though not very powerful or popular.

The revolt in favour of using Saṃskṛta as against Prākṛta, headed by Siddhasena Divākara (c. 533), was an attempt to raise the literature and the thought of the Jainas to the high intellectual level attained by those of the Brāhmaṇas. A Brāhmaṇa by birth, Siddhasena wrote a well-known text book of logic, and was, on the testimony of Hemacandra, a poet. This revolt naturally met with considerable opposition from the orthodox sādhus, who, moving among the illiterate, were blind to the great intellectual upheaval which was bringing about a deeper cultural unity in the country through language, literature and thought.

IV

The next stage of Jaina activity in Western India is represented by the life and works of Haribhadra (c. 750). Born a Brāhmaṇa at Cītoḍa, he was converted to Jainism by the nun Yākinī. His life was inspired by a strong hatred of the Buddhists who had killed his dearly loved nephews. He used the word viraha, bereavement, in the last verse of many of his works, it is said, to keep alive the memory of this loss. Proud and fierce, he travelled far and wide, displacing Buddhistic influence which was already on the wane. Haribhadra spent the best part of his life in Gujarāta, and, according to tradition, wrote 1,444 works, religious, philosophical and literary, both in Samskr̥ta and Prākṛta.

Out of his many dharmakathās, Samarāiccākahā (Samarādityakathā), composed in Māhārāshṭrī Prākṛta, has come down to us, and justifies his reputation so uniformly emphasized by successive generations of Jaina authors. It is written in a racy, simple, fluent prose interspersed mostly with verses in the Āryā metre, a welcome departure from the highly ornamental style which great masters of prose, like Bāṇa and Daṇḍin, affected. It is pre-eminently calculated to capture the imagination of lovers of romance rather than attract the admiration of a cultured few. The story is full of thrilling adventures of certain individuals through a succession of births as men, birds and beasts. The religious motive is inculcated at every step by the retribution which overtakes the heroes, who represent the cardinal sins, anger, deceit, avarice and untruth. The propagandist achieves his aim by repeatedly bringing home to the superstitious reader life's futility and the potency of Jainism as the only escape from it.

The story, in brief, is that Guṇasena, a prince, in his childhood always held up to ridicule Agniśarman, the ugly and mis-shapen son of the high priest. Tired of being a butt of ridicule, Agniśarman went to a sādhu to be initiated into the ways of asceticism. After the lapse of some years, Guṇasena, who had come to the throne by then, went to meet his old victim. He had, in the meanwhile, become a great ascetic. The king invited the ascetic to dinner. But, under a strict religious vow, he dined only once a month, and promised to come to the royal palace on the day he broke his fast. On the appointed day, the ascetic came to the royal palace. The king's men, however, were celebrating the birth of a prince and would not attend to the ascetic. Thereupon he went away; and was compelled to continue his fast for another month, as he had to go without his dinner that day. The king, when he came to know how the sage had been treated, in all humility, sought him out and begged his forgiveness. Another invitation followed. The ascetic again came to the royal palace, only to be turned out a second time for some insignificant reason. Four times, the sage received the penitent king's invitation, but, on each occasion, was turned out without food or attention. Worked up to a fury, Agniśarman vowed to wreak eternal vengeance on the king through all successive lives, and, giving up all food, died. He observed his vow, and at every re-birth, he persecuted Guṇasena. As a result of a series of adventures, Agniśarman was consumed by his own malice and Guṇasena, acquiring higher merit at each fresh birth, attained salvation.

The story is well-told, and represents a stage of social dharmakathā different from Tarangalolā. Unlike the older work, its religious parts are woven into the main story. Literary effort is less apparent. The emotion of love, intense, fresh and natural, which dominates Tarangalolā becomes subordinate to a spirit of adventure and religious zeal. In Tarangalolā, karma, and remembrance of previous life and its consequences serve to motivate the story; in Samarāṁcā, the story serves to illustrate those ideas and to impress certain moral principles upon the audience. In the former, the characters are taken from life; in the latter, they verge on the allegorical. The author himself calls it dharmakathā. The specimen furnished by Haribhadra suggests that a large body of fictional literature composed in Western India at that time, has been lost.

A little later (779) Udyotana, perhaps one of the disciples of Haribhadra, composed, mainly in Prakṛta and partly in Apabhraṁśa, his Kuvalayamālā in Jābālīpura (Jhālora). It contains very valuable historical material, and, among other things, shows that in Gurjaradeśa, around Bhīnṇamāla, Jainism had acquired great influence and the Jaina sādhus were active in pursuit of literature. A Samskrta version of this romance was made by Ratnaprabha (c1400). Udyotana's dharmakathā is still in manuscript. "This story", says the author, "composed without pride of poetic skill, has no literary point of view.

It has been composed with the object of only telling a dharmakathā. Let no one therefore find fault with it.”¹ It is woven round the old theme of retribution overtaking certain individuals who embody the cardinal sins through a succession of lives. But we miss Haribhadra’s raciness of style and freshness of presentation. Literary effort is transparent. The characters are more allegorical; the adventures are less exciting; the outlook on life is more pedantic. We feel narrow influences becoming predominant. The style of Bāṇa, not his creative art, is the principal inspiration.

Jaina dharmakathā was losing, or had lost, touch with real life. Siddharshi (906) wrote his Upamitibhavaprapañcakathā, a lengthy allegory on the world’s worthlessness, in the form of a dharmakathā. It includes dreary sermons, an encyclopaedia of knowledge, and a collection of stories, good, bad and indifferent. It is a reductio ad absurdum of a didactic and allegorical story. Siddharshi apologetically refers to the necessity of composing in Saṃskṛta. “Saṃskṛta and Prākṛta equally deserve importance, but men of little learning prefer Saṃskṛta. If the remedy is at hand, why not please everybody?” A few decades later, Jaina poets, like Dhanapāla (973), the friend of king Muḥja of Dhārā and the author Tilakamañjarī, frankly accepted Saṃskṛta as the language of literature par excellence.

1. I quote from Muni Jinavijaya’s article on Kuvalayamātā in Vasanta Smāraka. (Guj.)

CHAPTER IV

HEMACANDRA AND HIS TIMES

(A. C. 961-1200)

Mūlarāja, the founder of the Cālukya dynasty of Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa (961-996)—His successors—Jayasinha Siddharāja (1094-1143)—Kumārāpāla (1143-1174)—Learning in Pāṭaṇa and S'ūrpāraka—Soḍḍhala (1026)—Hemacandra (1089-1173)—His life—His meeting with Siddharāja—Influence over Kumārāpāla—Literary career—His position—Pioneer of Gujarāṭa as a cultural unit—Dryās'royamahākāvya—Kumārāpāla-carita—Other works—Siddhahemacandra—His contemporaries—S'rīpāla—Rāmacandra (1093-1174)—Nāṭyadarpaṇa—His dramatic theory—Nalavīṭasa—Kaumudī-mīṭrāṇaṇḍam—The Drama in Gujarāṭa.

About 953 Bhīnnamāla was abandoned, and its residents migrated to different parts of the country. Mūlarāja, a Cālukya or Caulukya, established himself at Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa, the capital of North Gujarāṭa (942 or 961).¹ A great general and a far-sighted statesman, he overcame Bārappa, the viceroy of the Deccan Cālukyas in Lāṭa; destroyed the formidable Gr̥haripu of Saurāshṭra; and subdued Lākṣhā Fulāṇī of Kaccha. He was a devotee of Śiva. He founded the famous Rudramahālaya at Siddhapura, and invited learned Brāhmaṇas to come and settle in Gujarāṭa. His ambition was to weld these homogenous provinces into one kingdom.

Thus the foundation of modern Gujarāṭa was laid; and, about the beginning of the tenth century, North Gujarāṭa, then known as Sārasvata Maṇḍala, definitely came to be known as Gurjara Maṇḍala. His successors, the Cālukya kings of Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa, soon came to be known as the 'Lords of the Gurjara Bhūmi.' They consolidated his conquests; and, as a result of their rule, Gujarāṭa became the home of power and culture. In the words of Kinloch Forbes, the author of Rāsmālā, 'their greatest and enduring claim to glory is, however, to be found in the fact that surpassing the boast of . . . Augustus, they found their country waste and left it a land flowing with milk and honey'.

1. The earlier date is corroborated by the Sāmbhara Inscription. See Annual Report, 1926, of The Sardar Museum, Jodhpur.

I

Mūlarāja was succeeded by his son, Cāmuṇḍa (997-1010). His grandson, Bhīma (1022-1064), fought valiantly against Mahmūd of Ghaznī when he raided Pāṭaṇa and sacked the temple of Somanātha at Prabhāsa in 1024. Bhīma soon recovered North Gujarāta, and consolidated his position. Under his beneficent rule, the country revived from the devastating effects of the invasion.

Bhīma's son, Karṇa (1064-1094), was also a good and a great king; but his illustrious grandson, Jayasinha Siddharāja (1094-1143), made Aṇahilavāḍa Pāṭaṇa the seat of an empire. He united North and South Gujarāta; annexed Kāthiāvāḍa, Kaccha and Mālvā; and carried his conquering arms to Ajmer in the north, Kolhāpura in the south, Mahobaka, modern Mahobā, in Bundelkhaṇḍa in the east. He was an indomitable warrior, a great monarch, and a very generous patron of art and learning. During the fifty years of his rule, Gujarāta became rich, powerful, and conscious of its greatness. The foundations of a new literary movement were laid; Pāṭaṇa acquired an all-India reputation as a seat of culture.

His nephew, Kumārapāla (1143-1174), succeeded him when past middle age, and followed in his footsteps for some years. About 1160, he came under the influence of a Jain sādhu, Hemacandra, and tried to introduce an ethical motive in the state.

II

Pāṭaṇa inherited the learning for which both Valabhīpura and Bhīnnamāla had been famous. Intercourse with Dhārā and Ujjayinī helped to keep alive the high literary traditions of classical Samskrta. The Brāhmanas invited by Mūlarāja to settle in Gujarāta, brought their literary and cultural traditions with them. The Nāgara Brāhmanas of Ānandapura, modern Vāḍanagara, persisted in their loyalty to high Brāhmanical tradition, taste and learning. Ūvata (c. 1100), for instance, wrote a commentary on Prātiśākyas and Vājasaneyi Saṁhitā. The Jaina sādhus not only continued to write religious works but carried their activities into the field of secular learning.

The literary activities of Lāṭa are represented by Sodḍhala. He was born somewhere near Bhṛgukaccha, and was a Vālabha Kāyastha. He was brought up by his uncle Gangādhara. At Sthānaka, Thāna, three successive kings of Konkaṇa honoured him with friendship. Vatsarāja, the king of Lāṭa, also invited him to his court. He finished his work, Udayasundarikathā, at Śūrparaka between 1026 and 1050. He was proud of his Kāyastha lineage, which he traced from Kālāditya, the brother of Śīlāditya of Valabhī, and regarded himself as the peer of Vālmiki and Bāṇa. The work is an imitation of Kādambarī. Notwithstanding these finds, the literary atmosphere of the period remains dim, till it is lighted up by Hemacandra.

III

Hemacandra's works have been preserved with great care by generations of Jaina sādhus. They have, however, surrounded his life and achievements with unreliable and, at times, unsavoury episodes. A comparative study of the main legends, tested by autobiographical details supplied by Hemacandra himself, would yield a different picture of this poet, saint, politician, and one of the most versatile of Indian scholars.

On Kārttika Śukla 5, Samvat Year 1145, (1089) Cāṅgā was born a Moḍha Vāṇiā at Dhandhukā. At the early age of eight, he was given away by his devout mother to Devacandra of the Puṇḍatalla Gaccha, a learned Jaina sādhu. Devacandra took the boy to Stambhatīrtha, Cambay, and, under the patronage of Udayana, the governor of the town, initiated him as a sādhu with the name of Somacandra. The infant sādhu then began his peregrinations, acquiring knowledge as he went. At the age of twenty-one, he was promoted to the dignity of a sūri, a preceptor. Thereafter, the little Cāṅgā was known as Hemacandrasūri.

Hemacandra soon came to be acknowledged as the most learned of Jaina sādhus. The Jainas were very powerful in Gujarāta from the tenth century onwards, when the warrior-trader communities, like the Ośavālas and the Pora-vāḍas of Bhīnnamāla, migrated to Pāṭaṇa. The sādhus, who had carried on their religious and philanthropic propaganda under humiliating conditions till then, gained great strength. It was but natural that they should thenceforth strive to remove the badge of inferiority which had been imposed upon them by the more powerful and learned Brāhmaṇas. Persistent attempts had been made by them to enlist the sympathy of the ruling Cālukyās; and when Siddharāja came to the throne, it looked as though they would be rewarded with success. His mother Mīṇaḷa, or Mīyānalla Devī, was a Jaina, and so were some of his ministers. The sādhus suffered from great disadvantages. Their favourite language was the dead Prakṛta; their audience was small and mostly composed of the uninfluential; and their doctrine had been banned as heterodox. But the attempt of Siddhasena Divākara to raise the Jaina literature to the level of the Brāhmanical, was being followed by many sādhus. They felt an urge towards participation in the great literary movement which, through Saṃskṛta, was maintaining the homogeneity of politically divided India. Hemacandra stood out as the greatest of them all.

In 1138 he led the learned men of Pāṭaṇa who waited upon Siddharāja to offer their congratulations. The conqueror had just returned triumphant from a war with Mālvā. Siddharāja, jealous of the literary glory of Ujjayinī, asked Hemacandra to write a Saṃskṛta grammar, and procured for the scholar the then available grammars from different parts of the country. This was the scholar's opportunity for which he had long been waiting. He compiled his famous text-book of grammar, and, associating his name with that of the monarch, called it Siddhahemacandra. Siddharāja got copies of it made, and sent them to all the kings in India. Twenty copies were sent to Kashmir, then the home of learning. This gave Hemacandra reputation throughout India.

He was appointed court poet, and began to compose Dvyāś'rayamahākāvya, in which he celebrated the glories of his patron's dynasty while illustrating the rules of Saṃskṛta grammar. He acquired considerable influence over Siddharāja, which served to protect the Jainas from the indignities of jealous Brāhmaṇas who were powerful at court.

IV

On Siddharāja's death, Kumārapāla came to the throne in 1143, and Hemacandra went back to his literary work. Besides the appendices to his grammar, he composed Anekārthasaṃgraha, a dictionary of homonyms; Chandonu-s'āsana, a work on prosody; Abhidhānacintāmaṇi, a dictionary of synonyms; S'eshākhyānāmamāla; Deśināmamāla, a lexicon of non-Saṃskṛta words; and Nighaṇṭuś'asha in three volumes, two of them dealing with medicine and botany, and the third, with jewels.

About 1157 he came in intimate contact with king Kumārapāla, who had successfully completed a series of campaigns against his neighbours. The king, a man of culture and about sixty two years old, easily fell under the influence of the great scholar. The Jainas accepted the king as their co-religionist. Jaina authors of the succeeding centuries have taken delight in dwelling upon this incident to show that the king adopted the Jaina faith to the exclusion of the worship of Somanātha, the tutelary god of the Cālukyas. This claim is pitched too high. Reliable evidence establishes that Kumārapāla was a Śaiva till 1169, four years prior to his death; and that he was not converted to Jainism, if by that is meant that he gave up his family devotion to Śaivism. It is equally well-established that he accepted Hemacandra as a counsellor, and went to Jaina temples; that as a result of Hemacandra's advice, he issued edicts prohibiting the selling and eating of meat, and traffic in intoxicating beverages. That he gave up meat and wine, gambling, lechery and the chase, and took the vows which a devout Jaina takes, is well founded. Ahimsā, non-violence, one of the cardinal principles of Āryan ethics, was for the first time made the basis of active social and political reform by Kumārapāla.

Hemacandra's literary activities continued even after he became the guide, philosopher and friend of Kumārapāla about 1160. The works which he composed between 1160 and 1173 are Yogasāstra; Vitarāgaprasasti; a commentary on Yogasāstra; Trishashtis'alākāpurushacarita, being the lives of Jaina saints, including Paris'ish!aparvan and Mahāvīracarita; cantos V–XX of Dvyās'raya, in which the history of the Cālukyas was brought down to the time of Kumārapāla; Kumārapālacarita in Prākṛta; and a commentary on Abhidhānacintāmaṇi. He died in 1173, and six months later his royal patron followed him. The commentary on the lexicon, Anekārthasamgraha, left incomplete, was completed by his disciple, Mahendra, after his death.

Hemacandra identified Mahāvīra with Śiva. To him, Jainism was the noblest of doctrines which made up dharma. He respected the Vedas, worshipped Somanātha, and accepted the authority of the Mahābhārata and the Manusmṛti. He was an apostle of Āryan culture. Samskrta was to him life itself, and the classical kāvyas, grammars and poetries were the source of his inspiration. Though a zealous propagandist of his faith, he was not a separatist. He gave his sect and province an honourable status in the cultural life of India; and became, for his time, the greatest representative of classical learning, which stood for Indian unity.

Siddharāja's one aim in war and peace was to outshine the traditional fame of the semi-mythic Vikramāditya. He was a generous man, open to flattery, and anxious to attain immortality if literature could procure it for him. He was building an empire, and the people of Gujarāta were acquiring the proud consciousness of being a great people. Jaina valour and wealth had a great share in this achievement. Jaina sādhus, therefore, definitely cast in their lot with this province and decided to make Gujarāta their holy land. Hemacandra gave up even the peregrinations enjoined by his religious vows; and with masterly skill and statesmanship, he concentrated his intellectual powers upon leaving a great literary heritage to Gujarāta. He assiduously fostered a pride in the greatness of the Cālukya kings, who had identified themselves with its glory. In his Dvyās'rayamahākāvya, he described the glories of the Cālukyas in the orthodox literary style, and invested the king of Pāṭaṇa with the dignity which classical poets had reserved for the ancient royal houses of the Sun and the Moon. Gurjara Bhūmi became a great country. Pāṭaṇa rivalled the glories of ancient Pāṭaliputra and Ayodhyā. But this later day specimen of the kāvya is, but for stray flashes of poetic merit and some historical material, lifeless and pedantic. Hyperbolic praise, characteristic of courtier-poets, mars the dignity of the whole poem, and is difficult to excuse in so versatile and great a scholar. It can only be explained by the fact that in the Pāṭaṇa of Siddharāja, literary taste and ideals had deteriorated.

Kumārapālacarita, illustrating the rules of Prākṛta and Apabhraṃśa grammar, is an attempt to give a Vikramāditya of its own to Gujarāta. It has served as a model for innumerable caritas, prabandhas and rāsas, which have kept alive the memory of Cālukyan Gujarāta, fostered provincial patriotism, and helped to build up a tradition of unity for modern Gujarāta.

The poem opens with a description of Kumārapāla, and the feudatories waiting upon him. Aṇahilapura is then described, as also the wealth of the king, the splendour of its Jaina temples, and the liberality with which he worshipped at these temples. The magnificence of the king's possessions, his gardens, the luxury in which he lived, and the pastimes of his people during different seasons are then dealt with. Canto vi deals with Kumārapāla's war with Mallikārjuna of Konkaṇa. Āmbaḍa, minister Udayana's son, who bore the title of 'Rājapitāmaha', achieves a victory over the king of Konkaṇa and brings his head, covered with gold, to Kumārapāla. The other conquests of the king are then referred to. In canto vii, Kumārapāla wakes up to find himself a Jaina uttering religious wisdom, and invokes Śṛtadevī. The goddess, in canto viii, delivers a sermon full of the well known philosophic and religious doctrines of Jainism. It is very poor as a kāvya. But it aims at conciseness and proportion, and bears some impress of the classical art, which later Gujarāti poets never succeeded in reproducing. Prākṛta, as this work shows, was next to Saṁskṛta the literary language of the Jaina sādhus.

Trishashtīś'alākāpuruṣa, re-written from Śīla's (c.870) Mahāpuruṣacariyam, and Parīśiṣṭaṭaṭarvan are lengthy collection of Jaina legends of heroes and saints. They are typical of Jaina literature. In one of them, for instance, Candragupta Maurya is made out a devout Jaina. Ordinarily very crude, they appeal only to those who are fired by the ardour of faith. In Dr. Keith's words, they do not attain the level of literature.¹

His Kāvyañus'āsana is borrowed from Mammata's famous Kāvyaṭrakāś'a and other similar works. His grammar Siddha-hemacandra is a monumental work. The first seven adhyāyas deal with Saṁskṛta, and the eighth with Prākṛta, Śauraseni, Māgadhi, Paisācī, Culikāpaiśācī, and Apabhraṁśa. The work is more in the nature of a text-book prepared from works of authority, but has been of immense value in the study of Prākṛta and Apabhraṁśa. His Yogas'āstra is very elementary, and falls far below the standard of many Jaina works on the subject. Hemacandra was a scholar and a practical reformer, rather than a thinker or a yogin.

VI

Hemacandra spent his life in trying to assert his ethical and literary superiority over the Brāhmaṇa scholars at the court of Pāṭaṇa. Their names and works have been unfortunately lost to us. Āmiga, grandfather of poet Someśvara, a Brāhmaṇa of Vaḍanagara, was the hereditary family priest of Siddharāja and a man of great learning. He was able to resist Hemacandra's attempts to acquire exclusive influence over the king. The great Bhāva Brh̥aspati, respected of Siddharāja, Kumārapāla, and the king of Ujjayinī, was from all accounts a mighty, venerable Brāhmaṇa of interprovincial influence. Kakkal, a Kāyastha and a friend of Hemacandra, was a great grammarian. But we know nothing of them except what is conveyed by stray and biassed references in the works of Jaina authors.

Of the Jaina contemporaries of Hemacandra, the available list is fairly long. But most of them have left purely religious works. One of them, however, is noteworthy. S'ripāla (c. 1095-1154) was, according to the Jaina authorities, kavīndra, poet laureate, of Siddharāja. The king, it is stated, had great affection for him and called him brother. He is said to be the author of a lost kāvya, Vairocanaṣarājaya. Some of his praśastis, eulogies, and a few verses quoted by other authors are available, and prove the poet's mastery over the technique then universally accepted by Saṁskṛta poets. Any estimate of his poetic worth is impossible. The poet's son and grandson were also poets. Two minor poets, Vardhamāna and Sāgaracandra, have left poems in eulogy of Siddharāja. Vāgbhaṭa, a son of the minister Udayana, wrote Alāṁkāra on the lines of Hemacandra's *Kāvyañius'āsa*na.

1. History of Sanskrit Literature, 294.

VII

Some pupils of Hemacandra have left literary works, the most noteworthy of whom is Rāmacandra (c. 1093-1174). Siddharāja gave him the title of 'kavikaṭāramalla'. He appears also to have been a recipient of royal favour during the reign of Kumārapāla. But according to a story preserved by Prabandhakośa (1349), he tried to prevent Ajayapāla from succeeding Kumārapāla on the throne. The prince, upon his accession, took his revenge by making the politically minded sādhu stand on a red-hot piece of copper. Rāmacandra was a prolific writer. Some of his works possess real merit, a rare thing for an age in which mere capacity to write in stereotyped Saṁskṛta was often the only passport to literary fame. The poet called himself the author of a hundred prabandhas, out of which over twenty-five have come down to us.

Nāṭyadarpaṇa, a treatise which Rāmacandra composed in collaboration with Guṇacandra, another pupil of Hemacandra, has valuable quotations from lost plays, and is a store-house of literary and historical material. This treatise, though planned on Dhanamjaya's Daśarūpa, shows its author to be an original thinker. He departed from the orthodox theory that there were only ten kinds of dramas, and added Nāṭikā and Prakaraṇi to make them twelve. But a bolder departure was to have divided rasa, sentiment, into pleasurable and painful. सुखदुःखात्मको रसः। All the authorities, including Hemacandra, had insisted that the rasas must produce pleasure similar to that of realizing Brahma. But according to Rāmacandra, people go to see painful dramas in order to see the skill of the poet or the actor. Thus he entered upon a defence of Tragedy. Rāmacandra combated another prevailing belief that an actor did not experience the feelings which he represented. He maintained that an actor would himself feel what he wanted his audience to feel: 'just as a prostitute, in trying to please others, does herself experience pleasure.' Evidently the author was not merely a theoretical exponent of dramatic technique, but had practical experience of stagecraft.

His Nalavilāsa is a good instance from which to judge his literary worth. The story of Nala and Damayanti is so brimful of human elements and dramatic situations that few men of letters in India have escaped its fascination. The story, originally told in the Mahābhārata, has been made use of, among the old eminent authors, by Guṇāḍhya, Kshemendra, Somadeva, Śrīharsha and Trivikrama; and, among the Jaina writers before Rāmacandra, by Dharmasena and Hemacandra. After him, numerous Gujarātī authors through the centuries have worked upon it. But he alone has tried to introduce realism into the drama by eliminating some of its miraculous incidents, like the message sent through a swan. This may have been necessitated by the exigencies of the stage. It may have been also a result of literary perception unusual for those times, and entitles the poet to rank high among later-day dramatists.

Another noteworthy drama by the same author is Kaumudimitrāṇandam. It is a prakaraṇa, a bourgeois comedy. The plot is made up of a number of incidents loosely woven together as in kathās. It is very much inferior to the prakaraṇa masterpiece, Mrcchakaṭika, but has some delightful touches. At places, it discloses a sense of humour; and is characteristically free from allegory and the aggressively propagandistic features of Jaina works.

Mitrāṇanda, a merchant, with his friend Maitreya, while at sea, is stranded on an island occupied by a gang of swindlers disguised as ascetics. The leader of the gang had a novel method of robbing people. He would entice a stranger to marry his daughter, Kaumudī; and, after the marriage, contrive to have him flung into a pit under the nuptial chamber. But, on this occasion when Mitrāṇanda makes love to Kaumudī, she actually falls in love with her father's intended victim and reveals to him the impending danger. Both seek safety in flight to Siṅhaladvīpa, Ceylon.

Their path, however, is beset with danger. Mitrāṇanda, taken for a thief, is arrested, but is saved by the king whose son he has cured of snake-bite. The king leaves him and Kaumudī in charge of the minister. The minister, enamoured of Kaumudī, sends away Mitrāṇanda to one of the king's vassals, who wants a victim for human sacrifice. Mitrāṇanda is, however, recognised and saved by his friend Maitreya who happens to be in great favour with the vassal.

Kaumudī is turned out of the minister's house by his jealous wife. She wanders until she meets Sumitrā, daughter of a merchant. Shortly afterwards, she is captured with Sumitrā's family by Prince Vajravarmān. When in captivity, Kaumudī and Sumitrā meet Makarāṇḍa, a friend of Mitrāṇanda. Sumitrā marries Makarāṇḍa, and the three begin their unhappy adventures. They encounter a kāpālīka, who, in order to kill Makarāṇḍa, revives a corpse. But the resurrected man kills the Kāpālīka instead. Makarāṇḍa then repairs to the king of Ceylon and finds Mitrāṇanda. The drama, so full of incoherent marvels, ends happily as Kaumudī meets her long-lost husband.

The lovers have been walking for a long time. Mitrāṇanda offers to massage Kaumudī's tired feet. She, abashed, will not let him do so. "To forget good manners was not praiseworthy for the daughter-in-law of a respectable family". Then follows this dialogue :

MITRĀṆANDA [to himself]: She does not know my family, nor my temper. I have not conferred any obligation upon her. And yet this dark-eyed one has given up her relatives for me. Really, women are thoughtless when in love. [to KAUMUDĪ] Dear! You have willingly undertaken great hardships; left your home, borne cold, heat and wind, wandered on foot; made yourself the laughing-stock of relatives who loved you so long; and all this for me, a merchant from a very distant country, whose family, character and wealth you do not know, whose love you cannot be sure of. You wish to climb a mountain but blindly. You wish to cross the ocean without even a cockle shell to carry you across. Without remedy at hand, you have lashed a big snake to fury.

KAUMUDĪ: Āryaputra! All women behave like this. Why are you surprised at this conduct of mine? Women, inspired by love, leave their long-cherished family for lovers whom they have seen but for a moment.¹

MITRĀṆANDA: [to himself]. Women are pre-eminent among the heroic. Blinded by love, they hold their life as blade of grass.²

KAUMUDĪ: They may go to foreign lands, suffer misery, wander unhappily; but they are true to their lovers, not to their own people.³

In Gujarāta, this was a century of drama. On festive or religious occasions, as a rule, plays were performed in temples with some kind of scenic display; and considerable attention was paid to acting. Out of the twenty six dramas, discovered and undiscovered, which Gujarāta has contributed to the six hundred odd dramas in Samskr̥ta, twenty three belong to the century between c. 1150 and 1250; and of these, Rāmacandra composed as many as eleven. He wrote four varieties, nāṭaka, prakaraṇa, nāṭikā and vyāyoga. Three dramas were written by two other pupils of Hemacandra, Devacandra and Yaśahcandra; and the rest, by writers of the succeeding two generations. Hemacandra and Rāmacandra made a great effort to plant the drama in Gujarāta, but it struck no root.

-
1. क्षणमात्रदृष्टप्रियजनप्रेमभरोद्विह्वला महिला : ।
चिरपरिचितानपि मुञ्चन्ति बान्धवानेषा किल प्रकृतिः ॥
 2. वीरेषु गणनां पूर्वं परमर्हन्ति योषितः ।
यास्तृणायाभिमन्यन्ते प्राणान् प्रेमान्वचेतसः ॥
 3. देशं व्रजन्ति विषमं सहन्ते दुःखं भ्राम्यति दुःखिताः ।
तथापि महिलानां प्रेम दयिते न स्वजनवर्गे ॥

CHAPTER V

APABHRAŒA LITERATURE

Early references to Apabhraṣa—Its extent—Its early literature—Dhanapāla (c. 900)—Bhavisayattakahā—The literature found in Hemacandra's works.—In the works of Somaprabha (1185).—In the works of Merutuṅga (1303)—Muñjarāsa.

Apabhraṣa was a literary language of Gujarāta at least from the time of the rise of Valabhipura. Daṇḍin (c.600) recorded that literature found expression in four media : Saṁskṛta, Prākṛta, Apabhraṣa, and Mixed. " The speech of Ābhīras and others in literature is known as Apabhraṣa," he said, thus clearly implying that Apabhraṣa was spoken not only by Ābhīras but by others as well, and that it had become the object of literary culture. Bhāmaha (c. 650) described kāvya as threefold : Saṁskṛta, Prākṛta and Apabhraṣa. Rudraṭa (c. 900) put it on a level with the older literary Prākṛtas and Saṁskṛta, and recognised varieties according to the country in which it was spoken. Rājaśekhara (c. 900) made it a limb of the Kāvya-purusha, poetry personified, and referred to it as being used in the literature of Māravāḍa and Saurāshtra. In his time, it was a literary language but had not ceased to be spoken. Bhoja (c. 1000) contemptuously refers to the Gurjaras as being satisfied with this language and no other. Nemisādhu (c. 1069) calls Apabhraṣa Prākṛta itself, and refers to its varieties, Upanāgara, Ābhīra, and Grāmya. According to him, the language could be properly learnt only from the people themselves. Thus, Apabhraṣa had one dialect for citizens, another for Ābhīras, a third for the vulgar, and was a spoken language in the eleventh century.¹

During the Calukyan period, a living literature was being produced by men who, away from the learning which prevailed at court, addressed themselves to the people in their own dialect. What of it is published is enough to give an idea of its variety, beauty and its comparative immunity from pedantry and religious obsession. Its outlook was artifices often detracted from its homely charm. Folk literature, like folk music, have one thing in common: they make a direct appeal to the hearts of men.

1. See Note A at the end of the chapter.

Dohākos'a, composed in East Bengal, contains many Apabhraṁśa verses. Svayambhūdeva (c. 900) wrote a Jaina Harivaṁś'apurāṇa and Paumacariyam. Dhavala also composed Harivaṁś'āpurāṇa in eighteen thousand verses. But the most popular form of literature was the social dharmakathā, of which an excellent specimen has been preserved. Bhavisayattakahā (Skt: Bhavishyatkathā) was composed by Dhanapāla about the tenth century.¹

The poet belonged to a Dhakkada Vaṇika family of Dhanāsiri living, probably, near Mount Ābu. The style bears traces of Saṁskṛta inspiration; the description is vivid and true to life; the story is well-told. It is made up of two disjointed parts, the original kathā and the typical Jaina ending. The first part of the story is very interesting, rich in adventure, and powerful in appeal. In some places, it possesses the freshness which we associate with the stirring tales in the Arabian Nights.

III.

In the city of Gajapura, or Hastināpura, there lived a young, handsome and wealthy merchant, and his wife, Kamalaśrī. Kamalaśrī gave birth to Bhavishya, the hero of the poem. He grew up into a very attractive child and received both a liberal and a military education.

His father grew cold towards his mother and married a second wife, Surūpā. She gave birth to Baṇdhudatta, who grew up strong and turbulent, wanton and pleasure-loving. He was a terror to respectable citizens. A desire to go to foreign lands took possession of this boy, and he collected about him needy young merchants ready to participate in his adventures. Even the king could not withhold his permission from this impetuous youth. His brother, Bhavishya, was also infected with the spirit of adventure and joined his younger brother.

The father's parting advice is reminiscent of Polonius'.

1. Vide Appendix I.

If any difficulty comes your way, act thus : Never speak a harsh word. Son, speak like an ignorant man who knows not the ways of commerce. Never give your heart even to a friend. Speak little and in measured terms. Increase your wealth by all means ; if need be, even by deceiving and making signs with hands. Praise your own commodities, and learn the mind of the other party by diverting his attention. Never let your secrets be known, and always try to know those of others. Heed not another's actions, even if you come to know of them ; deflect not from your course. Do not let anyone know your character, but discover the nature of others by gaining their confidence.¹

They sailed down the river Yamunā and came to the open sea. A gale drove their little fleet to a distant island, Mainākadvīpa by name. The young adventurers landed on the island. Bhavishya went into the interior in search of fruits and flowers, and was soon lost sight of. Bāndhudatta had now an opportunity to translate hatred for his brother into action, and, in spite of the remonstrances of his companions, ordered the party to set sail.

When Bhavishya found that he had been left alone on an unknown island, he courageously entered the forest full of birds and beasts ; and after making an offering to Jina, he took a path which led across the mountains. He came upon a city with lofty buildings, beautiful archways, white-painted houses with half-open doors and windows, and a market-place rich in wares. All these, however, presented an unearthly appearance. The palace was untenanted and silent. 'All musical instruments had assumed silence with the thought that there was no body to play on them.' Undaunted, Bhavishya came to a temple, where he duly offered worship, and went to sleep.

1. तुडिहिं चडिवि जइ तं किर किज्जइ वयणुवि नउ कराळु जंपिज्जइ ।

बोछहि पुत्त जेम अण्णाणिउं किं वणिउत्तहं मग्गु न याणिउं ।

सुहियहि हियउ णाहिं अप्पिक्खउ परिमिउं थोउ थोउ जंपिक्खउ ।

अत्थु विटप्पइ विविहपयारिहिं वंचिवि करसन्नासंचारिहिं ।

अप्पणु पक्खे भंडु सलहिक्खउ अण्हो चित्तु विचित्तु लहेक्खउ ।

अप्पणु अंगु णाहि दरिसिक्खउ अण्हो तणउं परामरिसिक्खउ ।

घत्ता । परकज्ज सुणंतुवि णउ सुणइं अप्पण कज्जहो णउ चल्इ ।

ण कलावइ केणवि णियचरिउ परहो अंगि पइसिवि कल्इ ॥ ६ ॥

God Acyutanātha came to know of his plight, and ordered: Maṇibhadra, the king of Yakshas, to protect Bhavishya and lead him back safely to Gajapura. When Bhavishya awoke from his sleep, he heard words directing him to go to a house where his future wife awaited him. He followed the direction, and found a lovely maiden, 'whose limbs, visible through her filmy dress, slyly laughed at him'. She slowly overcame her shyness, and besought him to take her away before the demon, who had made the city lifeless, destroyed him. Bhavishya narrated to her his own story; was convinced that they were made for each other; and offered marriage to her. The girl expressed willingness to accept him.

On hearing this, the son of Paṅkajas'ri (Bhavishya), gifted with good manners and well-born, smiled, and said, "Oh long-eyed one ! What you say is right. I am myself amazed. Though deserted by my own relatives and kinsmen, I was led to you in this way, no doubt, by my good luck. The traders with whom I came left me alone in the forest; and as I wandered from place to place, I saw your house. Drive all your fears away. Have no fears, daughter of a good merchant. You are well-born; I, son of a merchant, am led to you in this desert by fate. Now, everything will soon be well.

The young lady trembled with excitement, and, straightway, 'was pierced with the arrows of the god of love'. The girl 'with tremulous eyes', though overpowered by bashfulness which showed her graces to advantage, was bold; and quite modern. She asked, " Why don't you do what is imminent?"

But she did not yet know the man's character.

1. तं निमुणिवि पंकयसिरिपुत्ति विहसिउ सीलकुलकयजुत्ति ।
हे पसयच्छि कहिउ पइ चंगड महु अच्छेरयवित्रिउ अंगड ।
हउंमि इत्थु दइवि संजोइउ नियबंधवसयणाहिं विच्छोइउ ।
जेण समाणु वणिज्जे आयउ तेण जि वणि घळ्ळिउ असहायउ ।
सेरउ दीवि दीउ भमंतउ बलणि तउ मंदिरि संपत्तउ ।
एवहिं दूरिं दुरिउ विसज्जहिं अमउ अमउ भउ सयल्लु विवज्जहि ।
तुहुं वणिवरकुमारि कुलि पुंगले हउं वणिउत्तु देसि कुरु जंगले ।
विहिवलणि संघडिउ समागउ मंछुडु होसइ सयल्लुवि चंगड ।

Bhavishya, muttering a prayer to Vira, firmly replied, "O Lady with lovely eyes, what you say is right. But, beauteous maid, I am proud to abstain from taking what is not given to me ceremonially. When some one is found to give you to me in marriage, your desire will be satisfied. If nobody gives your hand to me, we shall live only as comrades in spirit. . . . The girl perceived that he was an extraordinary man and restrained her feelings. The sun had not yet set.¹

A desert isle, a setting sun, a beautiful maiden and a handsome man discovering their soul's affinity, the girl's audacious question, and the reply are elements in a situation full of charm and romance. And it is the work of a celibate Jaina sādhu addressed to a Gujarāti middle-class audience a thousand years ago!

Suddenly the demon appeared, fearful as darkness, like unto 'the loud laughter of Death.' Bhavishya faced him, ready for fight. But the demon suddenly recollected his former life and took kindly to the hero. In a sudden outburst of friendliness, he made the city hum with life, and bestowed it, as also the maiden, on the lucky hero.

Years passed, happy for Bhavishya and his wife, unhappy for the bereaved parents in distant Gajapura. In course of time, the young lovers were tired of the city. "To live in this lonely city is to see a dream, or to dance in darkness." They left it, and, with all their valuables, came to the seashore, where they hoisted a signal on the top of a tree to attract the attention of a passing ship.

Bāndhudatta's party was again ship-wrecked on the island, and met the couple. Bhavishya forgave his perfidious brother, loaded him with presents, and told him his story. Bāndhu, though jealous and spiteful, spoke sweet words and celebrated their re-union. In a happy mood, they all prepared to leave the island. But when the boats

1. पमणइं वीरचरित्तु अकंपिउ चंगउं पइं पसयच्छि पयंपिउ ।

अह महु मुद्धी परिफुडमाणहो अत्थि निवत्ति अंदत्तादाणहो ।

जाम्बहिं मज्झु को वि पइं देसइ तामहिं सव्वु तेय तं होसइ ।

अह नउ देइ कोइ तउ अंगउ ता अम्हहं साहम्मिय संगउ ।

घत्ता । तो चित्तिउ ताए एहु कोवि सामन्नु नवि ।

सैवरिउ वियारु नहि अत्थवणहो डुक्करवि ॥ V-16

were ready, Bhavishya happened to be away making a religious offering, and Bāṇḍhu repeated his old trick. Heedless of every one's protests, he set sail carrying away with him the bride and the wealth of his brother.

The story now begins to suffer in interest. Bāṇḍhu made unsuccessful overtures to Bhaviṣyānurūpā, his brother's wife. Ultimately, Bāṇḍhu reached Gajapura, passed off the lady as his wife, and the wealth as his own, and received great honours from the king. Only Kamalā, Bhavishya's mother, was disconsolate as her son was not among those who had returned.

The king of the Yakshas, however, brought Bhavishya to Gajapura in his aerial car. The hero met his mother, and sought justice from the king. The king punished the perfidious Bāṇḍhu, but forgave him at the instance of his magnanimous brother. The guilty were forgiven, and, to crown the general feeling of reconciliation, the king offered his daughter, Sumitrā, to Bhavishya.

The prince of Poyaṇāpura, in the meantime, marched on Gajapura. The king of Gajapura offered resistance, his army led by Bhavishya. And in the battle that ensued, he was victorious owing to the valour of the hero. The conqueror was appointed Yuvarāja by the king. This was, perhaps, the closing incident of the story as it originally stood before a Jaina author retouched it. Bhavishya and his wife went to Tilakdvīpa, where a sage explained to them the principles of Jainism, and recounted the past lives of Bhavishya. The hero, thereupon, renounced the world.

IV

Hemacandra has preserved several quotations from the Apabhraṇśa literature of the tenth and eleventh centuries. If these quotations are any indication, the literature of the time was mythological, religious, didactic, erotic and heroic. The elegant phrase and the picturesque image so often found in these verses indicate a well-developed literature.

HEROIC

Look at my lord : he has been described as the breaker of the temples of elephants gone wild in hundreds of battles.¹

Oh, friend ! It is just as well that my lord has been killed in the battle. Had he come home vanquished, I should have felt ashamed before my friends.²

On the field of battle, where arrows destroy arrows and swords cut swords, my husband cuts his way through a crowd of warriors.³

Dear friend ! My husband, when he is angry, destroys his enemies with his weapons as well as his hands.⁴

Of the two of us who have gone to the field of battle, who will seek the Goddess of Victory ? And who will seize the Goddess of Death by the hair, and live ?⁵

Cowards say thus : " We are but few, while the enemies are many," Look at the sky, young lady ! Only one moon gives light.⁶

DIDACTIC

The ocean keeps grass on the surface and jewels at the bottom; so, too, the master abandons his good servants and honours the wicked ones.⁷

Merits do not beget prosperity, but may beget fame. A lion does not cost even a penny, while an elephant costs lakhs.⁸

1. संगरसएहिं जु वणिणअइ, देकुखु अम्हारा कन्तु ।
अईमत्तहं चत्तंकुसहं, गयकुम्भइं दारन्तु ॥
2. भल्ला हुआ जु मारिआ, बहिणि महारा कन्तु ।
लज्जेज्जं तु वयसिअहु, जइ भग्गा घरु एन्तु ॥
3. जहिं कप्पिज्जइ सरिण सरू, छिज्जइ खज्जिण खग्गु ।
तहिं तेहइ भडधड निवहि, कन्तु पयासइ मग्गु ॥
4. कन्तु महारउ हलि सहिए, निच्छइं रूसइ जासु ।
अत्थिहिं सत्थिहिं हत्थिहिं वि, ठाउवि फेडइ तासु ॥
5. पइं मइं बेहिंविं रणगयहिं को जयसिरि तकेइ ; ।
केसहिं लेप्पिणु जमधरिणि, भण सुहु को थकेइ ॥
6. अम्हे थोवा रिउ बहुअ, कायर एम्ब भणन्ति ।
मुद्धि निहाल हि गयणयल, कइ जण जोण्ह करेन्ति ॥
7. सायरु उप्परि तणु धरइ, तलि धल्लइं रयणाइं ।
सामि सुभिच्चुवि परिहरइ, सम्माणेइ खलाइं ॥
8. गुणहिं न संपइ कित्ति पर, फल लिहिआ भुंजन्ति ।
केसरि न लहइ बोड्ढि अवि, गय लक्खोहिं घेप्पन्ति ॥

HEMACANDRA

People take fruits from trees, but cast off bitter leaves. But great trees, like good men, bear those leaves on their laps.¹

A wicked person, falling from great height, destroys his own people, even as a boulder, rolling down from the top of a mountain, crushes other boulders.²

Very rare, indeed, in this Kali age, is the man who hides his own virtues and reveals those of others. I pay my homage to that good man.³

To whom is life not dear? Who has no love of money? When time comes the great consider both of them contemptible as grass.⁴

The fire under the ocean does not care whether the waters are dried up. Is it not enough that it keeps on burning even in water? ⁵

HEROIC

The body had not met his body. The lips did not touch his lips. Even as I was drinking in his lotus-face, the meeting came to an end.⁶

Why cannot this young lady look farther by the light of the moon, when she can see her hand in the darkness by means of the rays issuing from her face? ⁷

What pity can these breasts have for others, when they cruelly fling themselves on their own heart? Men! Take care of yourselves. The breasts of maidens are ruthless.⁸

1. वच्छहे गृण्हे फलइं जणु, कडुपल्लव वज्जेइ ।
तोवि महदुमु सुअणु जिवं, ते उच्छंगि धरेंइ ॥
2. दूरुङ्गाणें पडिउ खलु, अप्पणु जणु मारेइ ।
जिह गिरिसिगहुं पडिअ सिल, अन्नुवि चूरु करेइ ॥
3. जो गुण गोवइ अप्पणा, पयडा करइ परस्सु ।
तस्सु हउं कलिजुगि दुल्लहहो, बलि किज्जउं सुअणस्सु ॥
4. जीविउ कासु न वल्लहउं, धणु कणु कासु न इह्हु ।
दोण्णिवि अवसरनिविडिआइं, तिणासम गणइ विसिह्हु ॥
5. सोसउ म सोसउच्चिअ, उअही वडवानलस्स किं तेण ।
जं जलइ जले जलणो, आएण वि किं न पज्जंतं ॥
6. अंगहिं अंग न मिलिअउ, हलि अहरें अहरु न पत्तु ।
पिअ जोअन्ति हे मुहकमल्ल, एम्मइ सुरउ समत्त ॥
7. निअमुहकरहिंवि मुद्धकर, अन्धारइ पडि पेक्खइ ।
ससिमंडल चंदिमए पुणु, कांइ न दूरे देक्खइ ॥
8. फोडेन्ति जे हियडउं अप्पणउं, ताहं पराइ कवण घण ।
रख्खसेज्जहु लौअहो अप्पणा, बालहे जाया विसम थण ॥

If she loves me, she will be dead by now; and if, she be alive still, she has no love for me. In any way, I have lost my wife. Why do you thunder you wicked cloud? ¹

Oh, bee, don't you make a buzzing noise in this forest. Don't you lament as you look in that direction. The Mālātī creeper whose separation has brought you to death is in another country.²

My heart has been captured by you; you have been taken in by her; she dances to the tune of another. O beloved! What can I do? It is just like a fish swallowing another.³

V.

During the Cālukyan period, several Jaina sādhus composed prayers and religious legends in Apabhraṃśa. Most of these religious compositions were adaptations from the Prākṛta which had long ceased to be understood by the ordinary people. When the sādhus at the court of Pāṭana, who formed the aristocracy of the priesthood, devoted themselves to Saṃskṛta, their humble co-workers continued to cater for the needs of the masses in their own language. But even their language soon ceased to develop on independent lines. Those who made use of Apabhraṃśa looked for inspiration to the sādhus who employed Saṃskṛta; and such fragments as have come down to us show that Apabhraṃśa literature flourished in the twelfth century on the wealth of expression and the grace of style furnished by Saṃskṛta masterpieces.

The following extracts from Somaprabha's Kumārapala-pratibodha will suffice to give an idea of the lines of progress which Apabhraṃśa followed.

If there is dishonour, but not death, one should go into exile; but one should not wander about playing into the hands of the wicked.⁴

1. जइ ससणेही तो मुइअ, अह जीवइ निन्नेह ।
बिहिंवि पयारेहिं गइअ धण, किं गज्जइ खल मेह ॥
2. भमरू म रुणुञ्जणि रण्णडइ, सा दिसी जोइ म रोइ ।
सा मालइ देसन्तरिअ, जखु तुहुं मरहि विओइ ॥
3. महु हियउं तईं ताए तुहुं, सविअन्नें विनडिज्जइ ।
पिअ काईं करउं हउं काईं तुहुं मच्छे मच्छु गिलिज्जइ ॥
4. माणी पणइइ जईं न तणु तो दसेडा चइज्ज ।
मा दुज्जन कर पल्लविहिं दंसिज्जंतु भमिज्ज ॥

The notes of the cuckoo are heard. Spring has come on the earth. The great King, Love, like a warrior, has given an exhibition of his victorious might.¹

Seeing the rays (kara, which also means hands) of the Sun, the lover, Dame North is fascinated. Dame South sighs out Malaya breezes. The Sylvan goddess, covered by reddish new leaves, glows, as if dressed in red apparel, in the arms of her lover, Spring.²

The fresh sprouts of mango trees sparkle with swarms of black bees, as if the flames of love were emitting a stream of smoke.³

VI.

Hemacandra has quoted two verses from a Muñja-rāsa. Merutunga has given some more, and has also based Muñjaprabandha, in his Prabandhacintāmaṇi, on it. Evidently, it was a popular love poem of the eleventh century describing the adventures of Muñja, the king of Malvā styled Pṛthivīvallabha (c. 950-997). Its sentiments were unsophisticated, and its language, based on popular idioms. Perhaps it was what Hemacandra calls a grāmya mahākāvya.

Muñja, the gay lover and the indomitable conquerer, travels every night twelve yojanas to meet a lady-love. Later, his passion cools down, and she addresses him thus:

Muñja, the bond of love is already loose. Fool, don't you know that the thunders of Āshāḍha are already heard, and soon the roads will be unfit (for your dromedary to travel) ?⁴ . . .

1. अह कोइलकुलरवमुहुल भुणवि वसंतु पयडु ।
भट्ट व मयण-महा-निवह, पयडिअ-विजय मरट्ट ॥
2. सूरु पलोइवि कंत-करु, उत्तरदिसि आसतु ।
नीसासु व दाहिण दिसय, मलय समीर पवत्तु ॥
काणण-सिरि सोहह, अरुण-नव-पल्लव-परिणद्ध ।
न रत्तंसुय-पावरिय, महु-पिययम-संबद्ध ॥
3. सहयारिहि मंजरि सहहिं अमर-समूह सणाह ।
जालाउ व मयणानलह पसरिय-धूम-पवाह ॥
4. मुंज षडल्लादोरडी पेक्खिसि न गमारि ।
आसाढि घनगज्जीइं चिक्खिलि होसेडवारि ॥ Muñjaprabandha.

As you leave my arms, so do I leave yours. Who is at fault ? But if you leave my heart, I shall know that Muñja is wroth with me.¹

The water-maiden bears up life by kissing her own hand—the hand which drank the crystal clear water in which the beloved Muñja was reflected.²

Muñja carries on a life-long war with king Tailapa of Kārṇāṭaka. Against the advice of his minister, Rudrāditya, he crosses the Godāvarī; is defeated; and is captured by Tailapa. Tailapa's sister Mr̥ṇālavatī, a widow, falls in love with Muñja. While both are looking in a mirror, the elderly widow bewails her grey hair.

Muñja says, "Mr̥ṇālavatī, do not weep over departed youth. Sugar-candy, even if broken into a thousand pieces, will taste sweet."³

Efforts are being made by Muñja's friends to rescue him from the subterranean cell in which he is kept. Muñja insists on taking Mr̥ṇālavatī with him. She, afraid of losing her lover if they went to Dhārā, informs her brother about the plan; and it is frustrated by Tailapa.

Women are clever in inventing amorous talks to please the mind; the person who confides in them comes to grief.⁴

Tailapa forces Muñja to beg from door to door. The poet says :

Why did you not die by fire or string ? Why did you not become a heap of ashes ? To day, Muñja, tied to a string, is taken from house to house like a dancing monkey.⁵

1. बाहविछोडवि जाहि तुहुं हउं तेवंइ को दोसु ।
हिअयट्टिउ जइ नीसरहि जाणउं मुंज सरोसु ॥ Siddhahemcandra

2. रक्खई सा विसहारिणी बे कर चुंबिवि जीउ ।
पडिबिंबिअ मुंजालु जलु जेहिं अडोहिउ पीउ ॥ (op. cit.)

The meaning is obscure. I take मुंजाल to be मुंज; otherwise the verse would refer to a minister of Siddharāja.

3. मुंज भणइ मुणालवइ जुव्वण गयुं न झरि ।
जइ सक्कर सय खंड थिय तो ईस मीट्टी चूरि ॥ Muñjaprabandha

4. सउ चित्त हरिसट्टी भम्मणह बत्तीस डीहियां ।
हियम्मि ते नर दड्ढ सीझे जे वीससइ थियां ॥ (op. cit.)

5. झोली तुट्टी किं न मुउ किं न हुयउ छारपुंज ।
हिंडइ दोरी बंधीयउ जिम मंकड तिम मुंज ॥ (op. cit.)

While begging, Muñja calls upon the spirit of his departed minister who had advised him against crossing the Godāvāri.

Rudrāditya, now in heaven! Unattended, I stand, deprived of my elephants, chariots, horses and men. Call me to you : I stand with my face towards you.¹

A proud damsel contemptuously gives him whey to drink in a cup made of dry leaves. Muñja says :

Simple-hearted damsel! Do not turn away in pride, seeing me with a cup of leaves in my hand. Muñja was once the master of fourteen hundred and seventy-six elephants but now he has lost them all.²

Mr̥ṇālavati offers alms to Muñja.

Muñja says, "Mr̥ṇālavati, if wisdom after the event is the same as before it, no one would be overcome by calamity."³

Mr̥ṇālavati replies :

When luck turned, even the ten-headed king (Rāvana), the master of seas and the lord of the forts of Lankā, was destroyed. Therefore, Muñja, do not grieve.⁴

Ultimately, Muñja meets death under the feet of Tailapa's elephant.

The language of this poem approximates the earliest specimen of Old Gujarātī found in the works of the twelfth century.

Apabhraṇśa, thus, had a rich and varied literature intended for the people. But at the end of the thirteenth century, it was fast becoming inaccessible to the ordinary people, who no longer used it in speech. The deśabhaśa of the people, Old Gujarātī, was spoken from about 1100, or, perhaps, earlier.

1. गय गय रहगय तुरय गय पायकडा निमिच्च ।
सग्गट्टिय करि मन्तण उम्मुहुं रुदाइच्च ॥ (op. cit.)
2. भोलि मुन्धि गव्वु करि पिक्खि विपड्डुगुपांइ ।
चउदसइ सइं छहुत्तरइं मुज्जह गयह गयाइं ॥ (op. cit.)
3. जा मति पच्छइ संपज्जइ सामति पहिली होइ ।
मुंज भणइ मुणालवइ विघन न वेढई कोइ ॥ (op. cit.)
4. सायर षाइ लंक गढ गढवइ दससिरि राउ ।
भगवक्खय सो भज्जि गय मुंज म करि विसाउ ॥ (op. cit.)

NOTE A. REFERENCES TO APABHRANŚA

1. Patañjali, Mahābhāṣya (B. C. 150). ante p. 17.

एकैकस्यहि शब्दस्य बहवोऽपभ्रंशाः तथा । गौरिरित्यस्य शब्दस्य गावी गोणी गोता गोपोतलिकेत्येवमादयोऽपभ्रंशाः ।

2. Bharata, Nāṭyaśāstra XVII. (A.C. 200.) ante p. 17.

एवमेतत्तुविज्ञेयं प्राकृतं संस्कृतं तथा ।

अत ऊर्ध्वं प्रवक्ष्यामि देशभाषाप्रकल्पनम् ॥ २४ ॥.....

गवाश्वाजाविकौष्ट्रादि घोषस्थाननिवासिनाम् ।

आभीरोक्तिः शाबरी वा द्राविडी द्रविडादिषु ॥ ५५ ॥

3. Inscription of Dharasena II of Valabhī, refering to his father Guhasena (559-569), Bombay Gazeteer Vol. I, p. 90. ante p. 21.

संस्कृतप्राकृतापभ्रंशभाषात्रयप्रतिबद्धप्रबन्धरचनानिपुणतर.....

4. Daṇḍin, Kāvyādarśa I. (c. 600). ante p. 48.

तदेव वाङ्मयं भूयः संस्कृतं प्राकृतं तथा ।

अपभ्रंशश्च मिश्रं चेत्याहुरार्याश्चतुर्विधम् ॥ ३२ ॥.....

आभीरादिगिरः काव्येष्वपभ्रंश इति स्मृताः ।

शास्त्रे तु संस्कृतादन्यदपभ्रंशतयोदितम् ॥ ३६ ॥

5. Bhāmaha, Kāvyālaṃkāra I. (c. 650). ante p. 48.

शब्दार्थौ सहितौ काव्यं गद्यं पद्यं च तद्वद्विधा ।

संस्कृतं प्राकृतं चान्यदपभ्रंश इति त्रिधा ॥ ३६ ॥

6. Rudraṭa, Kāvyālaṃkāra II. (c. 900) ante p. 48.

प्राकृतसंस्कृतमागधपिशाचभाषाश्च शौरसेनीच ।

षष्ठोऽत्र भूरिभेदो देशविदेशादपभ्रंशः ॥ १२ ॥

7. Rājasekhara, Kāvyamīmāṃsā (c. 900) ante p. 48.

(a) शब्दार्थौ ते शरीरं संस्कृतं मुखं प्राकृतं बाहुः जघनमपभ्रंशः पैशाचं पादौ उरोमिश्रम् ।

(b) गौडाद्याः संस्कृतस्थाः परिचितरूचयः प्राकृते लाटदेश्याः

सापभ्रंशप्रयोगाः सकलमरुभुवष्टक् भादानकाश्च ।

आवन्त्याः पारियात्राः सहृदशपुरजैर्भूतभाषां भजन्ते

यो मध्येमध्यदेशं निवसति स कविः सर्वभाषानिषण्णः ॥....

(c) सुराष्ट्रणवाद्या ये पठन्त्यर्पितसौष्ठवम् ।

अपभ्रंशावदंशानि ते संस्कृतवचांस्यपि ॥

(d) अपभ्रंशभाषाप्रवणः परिचारक वर्गः ...

(e) पश्चिमेनापभ्रंशिनः कवयः ।

8. Bhoja, Sarasvatikanṭhābharaṇa (c. 1000), ante p. 48.

अपभ्रंशेन तुष्यन्ति स्वेन नान्येन गुर्जराः ।

9. Nemisādhū, Commentary on Rudraṭa's above quoted Kāvyaḷamkāra II. 12. (c. 1069). ante p. 48.

तथाप्राकृतमेवापभ्रंशः । स चान्यैरूपनागराभीरप्राम्यावभेदेन त्रिधौक्तस्ति-
रासार्थं मुक्तं भूरिभेद इति । कुतो देशविशेषात् । तस्य च लक्षणं लोकादेव सम्यगवसेयं

10. Hemacandra, Siddhahemacandra (c. 1140) contains 120 sūtras on Apabhraṇśa, and about 180 verses by way of illustrations. ante p. 53-55.

11. Vāgbhaṭṭāḷamkāra (c. 1200), ante p. 44.

अपभ्रंशस्तु तच्छुद्धं यद्यबूदेशेषु भाषितम् ।...

यस्मिन्देसे स्वभावतो या भाषोच्यते सोपभ्रंशो भवतीत्यर्थः ।

2. Mārkaṇḍeya, Prākṛtasarvasa (1450), ante p. 21.

(a) ब्राचंडो लाटवैदर्भावुपनागरनागरौ । ... द्राविड गौर्जराः ॥... ..

सप्तविंशत्यपभ्रंशाः ॥

(b) संस्कृताढ्या च गौर्जरी । चकारात् पूर्वोक्तकभाषाग्रहणम् ॥

It is likely that there was only one literary Apabhraṇśa, and not many; that it was used as lingua franca by the cultured in the whole of North India from Mahārashtra and Gujarāta to Assam; and that the allied modern Indian vernaculars, Hindi, Bengali, Marāṭhi, Gujarāti &c. sprang from it. Vide, P. L. Vaidya, The Apabhraṇśa Literature of the Tenth Century and its Influence on Marathi Language. Jour. Bom. University I. vi. 218. May, 1933.

CHAPTER VI.
SOMEŚVARA AND HIS TIMES.
(A. C. 1173-1297)

Yaśahpāla (c. 1174)—Moharājaparājaya—Somaprabha (1185),—Kumārapāla-pratibodha—Political changes (1179-1297)—Viradhavala, Vastupāla, and Tejapāla—Vastupāla as patron of learning—Someśvara (1184-1254)—Kīrtti kaumudī—Surathotsava—Ullāgharaghava—Pralhādana (1164-1209) Pārthaparākrama—Vastupāla's Naranārāyaṇānanda—Arisiṇha's Sukṛtasamkīrtana—Bala-bhadra's Vasantavilāsa—Jayasiṇha's Hammīramada mardana (1222)—Udayaprabha—Subhaṭa—Medical works—The artistic value of the literature.

On the death of Kumārapāla, his nephew Ajayapāla (1174-76) succeeded to the throne, but not without combating a conspiracy in which some of Hemacandra's pupils were involved. He was not amenable to their influence as was his uncle before him; and later Jaina authors had their revenge by attributing to him vices of which contemporary records absolve him.

Yaśahpāla, a Jaina Moḍha Vanika occupying a high position in the king's service, composed an allegorical drama, Moharājaparājaya, celebrating the supposed conversion of Kumārapāla to Jainism. The drama was composed between 1174 and 1177, and was performed at Kumāra-vihāra at Tharapadra, modern Tharāḍa near Pāḷaṇapura. The drama, except for Kumārapāla, Hemacandra and, perhaps, the court jester, contains allegorical characters, and is a good specimen of later-day literary performances. Yaśahpāla's style is simple and delightful, but lacks the classical touch. In technique, incident and human interest, his work is decidedly inferior to Rāmacandra's.

Jñānārpaṇa, the spy sent to report on Moha, Delusion, comes to king Kumārapāla and reports that Moha has successfully besieged the city of 'Man's Mind'. Its king, Vivekacandra, the Moon of Discrimination, has fled, taking his wife and his daughter, Kṛpāsundarī, Compassion, with him. One of Kumārapāla's queens, Kīrttimāñjari, Garland of Fame, with her brother Pratāpa, Valour, is also reported as thinking of going over to Moha, as the king had fallen under the influence of a Jaina sādhu.

In Act II, Kumārapāla sees Kṛpāsundarī, and falls in love with her. The queen, Rājyaśrī, Royalty, is angry with the king, and the king asks to be forgiven. In Act III, Puṇyaketu, the Banner of Merit, conceals himself behind the statue of a goddess; and, making believe that the goddess is speaking, prevails upon Rājyaśrī not only to give up her wrath, but to send an offer for Kṛpāsundarī's hand. But, when the offer is sent, Viveka consents only on condition that the seven vices are banished from the kingdom, and the king abolishes the practice of confiscating the estate of men dying without male issue. The king agrees to the conditions and forgoes the property of a dead millionaire, who, however, turns up with a new bride in an aerial car. In Act IV, gambling, flesh-eating, drinking, slaughter, theft and adultery are banished in spite of the plea that they bring in revenue. In Act V, the king, armed by Hemacandra with his Yogaśāstra, wins a victory over Moha.

Moharājaparājaya contains materials for reconstructing the life and splendour of Pāṭana and its merchants, 'whose wealth was the envy of emperors'. An interesting episode refers to the act of Kumārapāla in abrogating the law, whereby the estate of a deceased leaving a widow but no son escheated to the crown. When the king was informed that a millionaire, Kubera, had died and that his vast wealth had lapsed to him under the law, he feelingly expressed himself thus :

What policy is it which entitles wicked kings to take a dead man's wealth, collected by him in high hopes, after a long struggle, and with multitude of worries? The sinners who snatch away the loin cloth from a weeping woman may not have any compassion; but have they no sense of shame? ¹

Again, when he found that the relatives of the deceased

1 आशाबन्धादहह सुचिरं संचितं क्लेशलक्षैः

केयं नीतिर्नृपतिहतका यन्मृतस्त्वं हरन्ति ।

क्रन्दन्नारीजघनवसनाक्षेपपापोत्कटानां

माः किं तेषां हृदि यदिकृपा नास्ति तत्किं त्रपापि ॥

would not enter his house before the king's servants had taken possession of his wealth under the law, he said :

Afraid of the king, the relatives of a person dying sonless cannot even perform his obsequies. The members of his family, crying with grief, are made miserable by the king's servants, who, more ruthless than the servants of Death, are busy searching for wealth.¹

These verses throw light on a custom then in vogue, and on the sentiments which ruled Kumārapāla's conduct. A court receiver in an administration suit filed on the death of a man under modern law, has scarcely improved upon these ancient ways of king's men.

In Yaśahpāla, we have the logical extension of the literary movement which Hemacandra introduced, of weaving round the kings of Pāṭaṇa an atmosphere which classical kāvyas had created round the epic heroes. But literary inspiration had receded into the back-ground. Sidharāja, Kumārapāla and Hemacandra were invested with a transparently semi-mythic importance. And the classical style was unabashedly made to ply the bard's inglorious trade, or play a hand-maid to the religious zealot.

II.

The next author of importance was Somaprabha, a sādhu. He wrote his Kumārapālapratibodha in c. 1185, twelve years after Kumārpāla's death at Pāṭaṇa in the upāśraya of Siddhapāla, Śrīpāla's son. The work was read by the author to Guṇacandra and two other disciples of Hemacandra. The work is principally in Prakṛta and Apabhraṃśa, with some parts in Saṃskṛta. The author sets out his object thus :

Though the lives of Hemacandrasūri and Kumārapāla are interesting from other points of view, I desire to say something about the teaching of the Jaina faith only.

And faithfully does the author keep his word ; for, the work is a series of sermons on Jaina vows supposed to

1. कर्तुं तत्क्षणमौर्ध्वदेहिकमहो पापं भयाद्भुजां
निष्पुत्रस्य मृतस्य बान्धवजनः सिग्धोऽपि नासीदति ।
क्रन्दन्किं च कदर्थ्यते गृहजनोन्निष्यद्भिरन्तर्धनं
धिकं यमकिंकरैव नृपव्यापारिभिर्निष्कृपैः ॥

have been delivered by Hemacandra to Kumārapāla, and gives an exaggerated account of how the latter carried them into practice. This lengthy work is dreary and devoid of any literary merit or historical value. The work is useful only as a landmark. It shows how, within two decades, the Jaina sādhus canonised Hemacandra and Kumārapāla, and absorbed them so completely in their religious literature that they ceased to be looked upon as men. Idolatry, in literature as in life, finds a fertile soil in India, and ruins the literary gifts of many who would be noteworthy writers but for it.

The author's other works are Sumatināthacarita, a religious work; Sūktimuktāvalī, a collection of didactic verses; Śatārthakāvyaṃ, verses having a hundred meanings; and Sṛṅgāravairāgyataraṅgiṇī, a tirade against women. None of these are of any literary value.

A remarkable work is Pancākhyāna by Purnabhadra (1199). It is a revised version of Pañcatantra of Viṣṇuśarma. This edition, prepared by the sādhu at the instance of a minister of Jhālora, has enabled modern scholars to restore this valuable contribution of India to the literature of the world.

III

Ajayapāla died in 1176, and was succeeded by his infant son, Bāla Mūlarāja, who died in c. 1178. During this period Mahmūd, or Shahab-ud-din Ghori, invaded Gujarāta; but its seasoned army led by the queen-mother, Nāikādevī, drove back the invader.

In c. 1179 the throne of Pāṭaṇa came to be occupied by Bhīma II. He styled himself Abhinava Siddharāja, but chroniclers have dubbed him Bholo, the Simpleton. The feudatories revolted against his authority, but were soon suppressed by Arjorāja Vāghelā, a Cālukya of Dholkā, who threw his weight on the side of his king. Arjorāja's son, Lāvanyaprasāda, or Lavanaprasāda, whom Bhīma appointed a sarveśvara, dictator, followed in his father's footsteps and, with the assistance of his son Vīradhavalā, consolidated the authority of Pāṭaṇa.

Both the Vāghelās, father and son, held their court at Dholkā. Under their strong rule, the kingdom again became powerful. Except for an unsuccessful invasion in 1194 by a Muslim army headed by Kutb-ud-din Aibak, Gujarāta was happy. In 1242 Bhima, who had outlived three generations of viceregents, died and Vīradhavalā's son, Vīśaladeva, formally occupied the throne of Pāṭaṇa. During his vigorous reign of nineteen years, he revived the golden prime of Jayasinha Siddharaja, and assumed, with some justification, the dignity of Mahārājādhirāja. He was the last great Hindu king of Gujarāta.

On his death in c. 1261, his throne was occupied by Arjuna up to c. 1264; by Sāraṅga from c. 1265 to 1296; and by Karṇa, popularly known as ghelo or crazy, from c. 1296 to c. 1304. After Vīśaladeva's death, petty wars destroyed the power of Pāṭaṇa, which soon came to rule over only a small part of North Gujarāta and Kāthiāvāḍa. In or about 1297, Ulugh Khan, the brother of Sultan Alla-ud-din Khilji occupied Pāṭaṇa, sacked the temple of Somanātha and laid waste the country. The end of the thirteenth century of the Christian era saw the end of self-governed Gujarāta.

The period from c. 1200 to 1250, when the great Vāghelās presided over the destinies of the country, represented a half century of great activity in the fields both of conquest and literature. Lavaṇaprasāda, Vīradhavalā, and Vīśaladeva were warriors, administrators and patrons of literature. They also knew how to choose their servants well and wisely. About c. 1220 Vīradhavalā invited the two brothers, Vastupāla and Tejaḥpāla, sons of a Jaina, merchant, Āśārāja, to become ministers of state. Rich and religiously disposed, they soon proved to be great warriors and statesmen. Jaina, Hindu, and even Muslim shrines shared their generosity. They erected temples and patronised art, their temples at Ābu being monuments of Indian art. Vastupāla was married to Lalitādevī, Tejaḥpāla to Anupādevī. Both ladies assisted the ministers in their work and were held in great esteem. The statesmanship and valour of the brothers gave to Gujarāta its last Mahārājādhirāja in Vīśaladeva. Vastupāla died in c. 1248, Tejahpāla a few years later; and both retained their power and the confidence of their sovereign till the last.

Vastupāla was decidedly the greater of the two. His personality, statesmanship, heroism and munificence evoked a chorus of literary praise. Someśvara, the family priest of the royal Cālukyas, composed works in his honour, and a host of other literary men followed the example. Many poets have been mentioned in contemporary works as being under his protection. The minister appreciated and encouraged literature; established three libraries at a cost of eighteen crores of rupees; procured for the poets the manuscripts of literary masterpieces; and helped them in the preservation of their works. And the poets repaid their debt well: they gave immortality to his life and works.

IV

Someśvara (c. 1184–1254) was the leading poet of Vastupāla's court. He was the family priest of the kings of Gujarāta, a direct descendant of Śola, the priest of Mūlarāja, and the grandson of Āmiga who officiated as a priest to Siddharāja. His father, Kumāra, was a physician as well, and cured Ajayapāla of his wounds. Someśvara has left two mahākāvyas, Kīrttikaumudī and Surathotsava; one drama, Ullāgharāghava; Rāmas'ataka; and two Pras'astis, one of which has not yet been found.

Kīrttikaumudī served as a model to many contemporary kāvyas which had Vastupāla as its hero, and represents a further stage in the evolution of the movement which, as we saw, could be traced to Hemacandra's Dvyās'raya. The audience loved to look back proudly upon the times of Siddharāja and Kumārapāla, particularly as Lavaṇaprasāda and Vīradhavalā were trying to restore Pāṭaṇa to its former glory.

Someśvara was an ardent admirer of Kālidāsa and looked upon Raghuvans'a as his model.

Kālidāsa was born a poet, and he sang Śrī Rāma's life. It was a mixture of sugar and milk.¹

1. कालिदास कविर्जातः श्रीरामचरितस्य यत् ।
स एष शर्करा योगः पयसः समुपद्यत ॥

Among the latter day poets, he mentions Māgha, Bhāravi, Bāṇa, Dhanapāla, Bilhaṇa, Hemacandra, Nīlakaṇṭha, Pralhādāna, Naracandra, Vijayasena, Subhata, Yashaḥavīra and Vastupāla, the last six of whom were his contemporaries.

The poet describes the city of Pāṭaṇa 'the house of Śrī'; its fort and its gardens where damsels come to play; the chants of its Brāhmaṇas, the songs of its women, the eulogies of its bards; its houses which were white like snow, its palaces in which luxury reigned; and the sacrificial smoke which, like Yamunā, rose skywards to join the heavenly Gangā. The city outshines all the cities of traditional fame. The poet then describes the river, the temples comparable to the Himālaya, the banners of the temples 'so high as to protect even Aruṇa, the Sun's charioteer, from his master's fiery rays'; the roads crowded with elephants and horses. The women also come in for their share of praise.

Wherever the women move, undulating with grace, the eyes of the gallants follow like their maid servants. Those who are looked at by the women with sidelong glances, are smitten by the god of love, who, though bodiless, assumes a body. Here, Brahmā created women of matchless beauty; and yet their beauty was matched by its reflection in the bejewelled walls.¹

In canto ii, the poet gives a short history of the kings of Pāṭaṇa, beginning with Mūlarāja. Siddharāja is rightly given the central place. Lavaṇaprasāda's dream is then described. Gurjara Rājyalakṣmī, the royal dignity of Gujarāta, appears to him, 'a goddess in the very image of a full-moon night, her face white like the moon, a white mark on her face, in white clothes, a white garland in her hand'. She laments the downfall of Pāṭaṇa, weeps over her vanished glory and departed heroes.

-
1. यत्रयत्र प्रसर्पन्ति सलीलं यन्मृगिदृशः ।
 दासीव दष्टिरन्वेति तत्रतत्र विलासिनाम् ॥
 वीक्षिता वलितग्रीवं तन्वीमिथैत्र केपियत् ।
 मन्ये व्यावर्त्तितांगेन तेऽनङ्गेनापि ताडिताः ॥
 रूपेणाप्रतिमाः कांता यत्र धात्रा कृताः किल ।
 तथापि प्रतिमास्तासां संजाता रत्नभित्तिषु ॥ 1. 68, 69, 70.

Here darkness was unknown, for, the scions of the line of Mūlarāja spread their light all around. But, now, a light was not to be found even at night. The city, once resounded with drums at night; now, only the howl of jackals is heard. Then, the lake bloomed with the lotus-faces of young damsels; now, it helplessly sheds tear-drops as the wind blows over it.

And she exhorts Lavaṇaprasāda to win back her departed glory.

The dream vanishes, and the hero sends for his son, and his priest, the poet. The poet explains the meaning of the dream and recommends the appointment of a good minister.

In canto iii, the family of Vastupāla comes in for a highly eulogistic tribute. The king appoints Vastupāla as his minister. (canto iv.) The minister takes charge of Khambhāta and is faced with an invasion from the South. Śaṅkha, king of Lāṭa, also sends a message threatening to march on the city. (canto v) The poet, then, deals with Vastupāla's war with Śaṅkha and celebrates his patron's victory in high flown phrase. (canto vi) He sings the beauties of Khambhāta in the traditional manner of kāvyas and narrates Vastupāla's conversation with his poets. (canto vii) Then follows a description of moon-rise (canto viii); of the daily life of the minister and (canto ix); of his pilgrimage to Śatruṃjaya, Giraṇāra and Prabhāsa.

Someśvara's diction has both grace and lucidity. When he has something new to say, he rises above the wearisome and degenerate imitation of classic models. The kāvyas had become rigid and lifeless. The vicious taste of the paṇḍitas perpetuated the bondage of form, style and expression which were no longer living interpretations of life; and, like all worn out conventions, they stifled the soul that accepted them. From the historical point of view the work is invaluable. The author had first-hand knowledge of events connected with the Cālukya kings, and was free from any propagandist zeal. In the first three cantos, he sets men and events in a fairly correct perspective, and is a fairly reliable guide for leading the reader out of the labyrinth of Jaina works.

His next mahākāvya, Surathotsava, deals with the episode from the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, of King Suratha who reconquered his lost kingdom by the favour of the goddess Caṇḍī. His drama, Ullāgharāghava, in eight acts, is based on the Rāmāyana. It was performed before the temple of Śrī Kṛṣṇa at Dvārikā. The author introduces fine sentiments and incidents in the drama to retouch the character of Rāma. The modesty of Rāma, for instance, is represented with skill in the stanza which he addresses to his father when people celebrate his victory over Paraśurāma.

As prescribed by destiny, I broke the old bow of Śaṅkara. Reṇukā's son (Paraśurāma) conceded to me a great deal in the field of battle, treating me as a child. But the people regard my breaking the bow as due to my valour only out of their affection for me. You must, therefore, stop them from doing so. It is improper to treat the great with contempt without reason.¹

V

Prahādana, whom Someśvara describes as 'the incarnation of Sarasvatī, as having won fame by being the son of Sarasvatī and the husband of Jayaśrī, the goddess of victory', was a younger brother of Dhāravarsha, the Paramāra ruler of Candrāvati, and lived between 1164 and 1209. He was reputed to be versed in different philosophies. He was a warrior and founded the city Pralhādanapura, modern Pāṇanapura. Of his works, only Pārthaparākrama, a drama of the vyāyoga type (military spectacle), and a few verses have come to light. This one-act drama, exhibiting dīpta rasa or the sentiment of excitement, is based on an incident in the Mahābhārata, of Arjuna recovering the cows of King Virāṭa from the Kauravas.

Vastupāla himself, under the name of Vasantapāla conferred upon him by Someśvara and other poets, has left a mahākāvya called Naranārāyaṇānanda in sixteen cantos, dealing with the episode of Arjuna eloping with

1. भग्नं जीर्णं त्रिनयनधनुर्यन्मया दैवयोगात्
यत्संसोढः शिशुरितिरणे रैणुकेयेन चाहम् ।
लोकः प्रीत्या तदपि किल मे पौरुषं भाषमाणे ।
वार्यः कार्या न खलु महतां गर्हणा निर्निमित्तम् ॥

Subhadra, Kṛṣṇa's sister. Coming as it did from so great a man and so generous a patron of poets, it naturally evoked great contemporary praise. According to Alaṃkāramahodadhī, it improved upon Vyāsa's language;¹ and not to be outdone, Someśvara called the minister the adopted son of Sarasvatī. Merutuṅga called him a mahākavi. His fame travelled even outside Gujarāta. But the poem is a mechanical product of the literary conventions which were in vogue all over the country. Pompous kāvyas without true poetic inspiration or direct touch with reality were turned out in that age like factory-made articles.

Arisinha's Sukṛtasamkīrtana is a kāvya modelled on Kīrtikaumudī but composed with less imagination and poetic exuberance. Balabhadra's Vasantavilāsa is the third and the largest mahākāvya on Vastupāla, and follows the same example both in matter and style. In this poem, the presiding deity of the kingdom appears in a dream to Vīradhavaḷa, and the conventional descriptions follow with mechanical precision.

The messenger from Śaṅkha who advises Vastupāla to flee adds that no one will feel disgraced by the flight of a bania. The minister gives an apt reply :

Messenger ! It is a delusion to think that Kshatriyas alone can fight, and not a Vaṇika. Did not Āmbaḍa, a Vaṇika, kill Mallikārjuna in battle ? I, a Vaṇika, am well-known in the shop of the battlefield. I buy commodities—the heads of enemies—weighing them in the scales of swords ; I pay the price in the form of Heaven.²

And Vastupāla proved as good as his word.

Jayasinha, a Jaina sādhu, while living at the temple of Munisuvrata at Bhṛgukaccha between 1222 and 1236, composed Hamṃira-mada-mardana, a play, in which is

1. कोमलयति द्वैपायनीयवचः ।
2. क्षत्रिया : समरकेलिरहस्यं जानते न वणिजोः भ्रमएष ।
अम्बडो वणिगपि प्रधने किं मल्लिकार्जुननृपं न जघान ॥
दूत रे वणिगहं रणहटे विश्रुतोऽसि तुलया कलयामि ।
मौलीभाण्डपटलानि रिपूणां स्वर्गवेतनमथो वितरामि ॥

celebrated the victory obtained by Viradhavala with the aid of Vastupāla over the forces of some Muslim invader. The play was written to please Jayāntasinha, son of Vastupāla, and was performed at the festival of the procession of Bhīmeśvara at Khambhāta. It furnishes some historical information about the event and the times, but is very inferior in style and technique to the dramas of Yaśahpāla, Rāmacandra and Someśvara. There is no individuality in the characters, no plot, and no movement. The style is highly affected even if judged by the standard of his contemporaries, and the author's unbounded delight in long compounds takes away whatever little charm its perusal might otherwise afford. The mutual adulation in which Viradhavala and Vastupāla indulge at every step is unusual even for an age given to unqualified panegyrics.

Gujarāta is menaced by Turushka Hammira aided by the Yādava Siṅhaṇa, who can also rely upon the assistance of Saṅgrāma, nephew of the king of Lāta. In Act I, Vastupāla advises Viradhavala to secure the aid of the kings of Māravāḍa. Vastupāla's spies run to and fro between the warring kings. One of them induces Saṅgrāma to flee; and the minister, some time later, enters into a treaty with him. Māravāḍa is destroyed by the invading Mlechha, Malicchrikara, who, however, retreats at the approach of Viradhavala. The diplomacy of Vastupāla surrounds the invader with many difficulties, and he is defeated by Viradhavala. Finally, the king goes to the temple of Śiva, where the god grants a boon to the king. If the minister is properly delineated in this drama, he was an astute diplomat rather than the heroic statesman described by the exuberant Someśvara. Vastupālatejahpāla-prasasti of the poet follows Kīrtikaumudī both in form and substance.

Udayaprabha, the preceptor of Vastupāla, composed Saṅghādhīpati, a mahākāvya, on the pilgrimage of Vastupāla and Sukṛtakīrtikallolinī, a kāvya of the usual type. The author has a better style than Jayasinha. A Brāhmaṇa poet, Subhata, has left a play called Dūtāṅgadam. Its merits do not justify the praise which Someśvara, in his usual vein, showered on its author. Śrīpāla's grandson, Vijayapāla, has left a drama, Draupadīsvayamvara, and Amaracandra, among other works, a summary of the Mahābhārata called *Bālabhāratakāvya*m.

A few scientific works may be briefly noticed here. The versatile Hemacandra wrote Nighaṇṭuśeṣa, a dictionary of medical terms. In the twelfth century, we come across a great Gujarātī physician, Sodhala, a Rāikwāla Brāhmaṇa. His works, Guṇasaṁgraha and Gadānigraha are considered as of exceptional merit. The thirteenth century saw the works of two more physicians of eminence, Govindācārya, a Moḍha Brāhmaṇa, and Yaśodhara, a Śrīgaḍa Brāhmaṇa.¹

VI

Literature, judged from a proper artistic standard, was very poor and lifeless indeed. In this age, the authors had before them for their model either Māgha's Śīsupālavadha or Bāṇa's Kādambarī, and looked to Kālidāsa as the ultimate source of their inspiration. But their style was wooden and, often, incorrect. Their fancy, unlike Kālidāsa's, was either fettered by conventional alaṁkāras and modes of expression, or performed unmeaning acrobatics which never added any beauty to the picture sought to be drawn. Characterisation as a literary quality simply did not exist. Literary effort began and ended with a mechanical weaving of classical myths or contemporary episodes into works devoid of interest and characterised by extravagance of thought and expression. Poetry is a revelation; and these poets, tied to the apron strings of their masters, had nothing to reveal. They had no ideas to convey, no social life to depict, no deeper interpretation to offer.

1. Durgashankar Shastri, Gujarātīnuṁ Vaidyaka Sahitya. Sahitya P. Report Vol. II.

CHAPTER VII.

A RETROSPECT OF THE PERIOD

Gurjaradeśa—The activities of the People—Social life—Śaivism—Vaishṇavism—Philosophic influences—Jainism—Gujarāta one with Āryāvarta—Its activities—Āryan culture—Its literature and life—The premature close of the period.

On the death of Viśaladeva in 1261, the brilliant period in the history of Gujarāta which began with Mūlarāja in 961 came to an end. During this period, Ānarta, which was part of the old kingdom of Gurjaratrā, became a separate kingdom, and, with Lāta, Kāthiāvāḍa, Kachha and part of north Koṅkaṇa, was consolidated into one political and cultural entity under the name of Gurjaradeśa. The kings of Pāṭaṇa, with their triumphant arms, raided diverse parts of India and succeeded in founding a powerful kingdom. And, for over a century, they successfully repulsed the invading Mussalman.

II

During this period, the maritime activity of Gujarāta was at its highest, its merchants being as enterprising as its kings. Large parts of the country were brought under cultivation. Cities sprang up at different places. The country was fabulously rich.

The social progress of the people continued unchecked. The cultured and powerful communities of Rajputāna and Mālvā came and settled in the country. All of them found an honourable place in the existing social system, and enjoyed social autonomy. Several of them, like the Ośvālas, the Porvāḍas and the Śrīmāls, attained eminence both in the society and the state. Brāhmaṇas from different parts of the country also came and settled here.

The same characteristics of the people to which we have referred in an earlier chapter continued to distinguish them throughout this period. There were equal opportunities of advancement for high and low, more so than in any other part of the country. A striking example of this is provided by the Jainas, who slowly attained a status as high as that of the Brāhmaṇas in learning and politics, and as that of the Kshatriyas in war. Their sādhus contested the Brāhmanical superiority in matters cultural, though they never came near overthrowing it. They were ardent students, prolific writers, and indefatigable preachers of ethical principles, especially of ahimsā. They opened the doors of learning to many for whom they would otherwise have remained closed. Someśvara, a Brāhmaṇa, Pralhādana, a Paramāra Rajput and Jaina sadhus like Jayasīṇha, had, irrespective of their differing communities, a common literary training, tradition and ambition. A Moḍha Vanika, Hemacandra, was the greatest scholar of the age.

G 19682/43536

The absence of a rigid religious basis for society made the absorption or tolerance of foreign elements in the social organism easy. The Magi of Persia became the Maga Brāhmaṇas. On more than one occasion, Mussalmans were converted to Hinduism and were absorbed. Fugitives from Persia found a home in Gujarāta. Mussalman traders and mercenaries from several parts of Asia and Africa came and settled in the country, and lived peacefully with their neighbours.

Rs 6/-

891-47
M96G

Gujarāta maintained its catholic traditions throughout this whole period. The social structure does not appear to have been very rigid. Caste was not so hide-bound as at a later period, and intermarriages were very frequent. Widow-remarriage was not banned. Adult marriage appears to have been the rule. The people on the whole were spirited and happy, and, for the times, cultured. Under the strong rule of Pātāṇa, they became united and powerful; and the name Gurjaradeśa, adopted for the country by its kings, gave them conscious unity. The various communities began to live a uniform life, and their culture acquired an individuality of its own. The ancient Āryan colonies were thus inspired by a tradition and cultural self-consciousness peculiarly their own. And Gujarāta was born.

III

Gujarāta, during the whole of this period, was predominantly Śaiva. The whole land is studded with temples of Śiva or their ruins, many of which date back to the pre-Cālukyan age. The rulers of Valabhīpura, except for one king, were devotees of Śiva, and styled themselves 'paramamāheśvara'. Their seals bear the impress of the bull sacred to their god. Dr. Bhagvanlal is of opinion that the temple of Somanātha attained its high position as a shrine under the Valabhī kings. The Cālukyas, as we saw, recognised in Somanātha their guardian deity, and so did a large number of chiefs during the whole period under review.

The Brāhmaṇas of Vaḍanagara, who came to be called Nāgaras, possessed high Brahmanical learning and were devotees of Śiva. The family priest of the Cālukyas and Vāghelās was a Brāhmaṇa of Vaḍanagara. Many of them were statesmen, warriors, officers as also priests and literary men. Many of the inscriptions of the period were written by them and their influence was considerable.

The most influential form of Sāivism was the Pāśupata cult, founded by Lakuleśa, who was born at Kāravaṇa a few miles south of Baroda, and worshipped as the eighteenth incarnation of Śiva. The shrine of Somanātha was in the charge of priests of this cult who had a high reputation for learning.

The worship of Viṣṇu, the Bhāgavata Dharma, introduced during the Gupta period, was favoured by a small section of the people. We find a temple dedicated to Kṛṣṇa at Giranāra in A. C. 455. Ruins of a large number of such temples, erected during the period and dedicated to one or other of the incarnations of Viṣṇu, are found in North Gujarāta. Hemacandra testifies to the existence of a temple of Viṣṇu in Pātaṇa. An inscription of 1074 begins with 'Om Namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya'. Hemacandra, in his Kavyānuśāsana, cites two verses indicating the popular Kṛṣṇa cult of the time.

"Mother ! Kṛṣṇa, while at play, ate as much earth as he could." "Is it true, Kṛṣṇa?" "Who said it?" "Baladeva?" "He is telling a lie." "Look into the mouth!" "Open. Let me see" The mother saw the whole universe in the mouth of the Child and was surprised. May this Keśava protect you!

The dark beauty of the child, Kṛṣṇa, was reflected on Rādhā's breasts, shining as gold pots. Believing the reflection to be a dark cloth, Kṛṣṇa again and again attempted to remove it. Seeing this, Rādhā smiled; and Kṛṣṇa himself was ashamed of his surprising mistake, and smiled. May this Kṛṣṇa be victorious!¹

Someśvara, in his Kirttikaumudī, bears testimony to the fact that the Jain Vastupāla worshipped both Śāṅkara and Keśava, and, in Surathotsava, refers to the love of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa. Viradhavala dedicated a temple to Viranārāyaṇa.

Gujarāta did not offer a good field for the intellectual activities which kept busy the great schools of Indian learning in other provinces. In the ninth century, Śāṅkarācārya, no doubt, exerted a powerful Vedāntic influence over the Brahmanas, who exorcised the old popular cult like Pāśupata of its fierce rituals. But Rāmānuja, Madhva, Nimbārka and other scholars of less renown frequently passed through Gujarāta, which served as a corridor linking north and south, and none of them, left any lasting centre of activity. The influence they exerted was just enough to make Gujarāta more catholic and tolerant.

When Mūlarāja came to the throne of Pāṭāṇa, Buddhism had long disappeared, and Jainism had no important following, the statements of Jaina authors to the contrary notwithstanding. But the immigration of the Ośvālas, Porvāḍas and other important communities gave Jainism an important position. During the three centuries under review, the whole of Gujarāta came to be

1. कृष्णेनाम्ब गतेन रन्तुमधुना मृद्भक्षिता स्वेच्छया
सत्यं कृष्ण क एवमाह सुसली मिथ्याम्ब पश्याननम् ।
व्यादेहीति विकसिते शिशुमुखे माता समस्तं जगद्
दृष्ट्वा यस्य जगाम विस्मयपदं पायात् स वः केशवः ॥

× × ×

कनककलशस्वच्छे राधापयोधरमण्डले
नवजलधरश्यामामात्मव्युतिं प्रतिबिम्बिताम् ।
असितसिचयप्रान्त भ्रान्त्या मुहुर्मुहुश्चक्षिप-
ञ्जयति जनितबीडाहासः प्रियाहसितो हरिः ॥

studded with beautiful temples erected by this small but wealthy community. It was left to Hemacandra to secure for his sect that position of dignity which till then was only reserved for the Brāhmaṇas. The Jaina sādhus spread an atmosphere which made for equality of status, non-violence, and such social purity as abstention from meat, drink and gambling could bring.

IV

Though the local pride of Gujarāta had altered the outlook on life, it would be erroneous to infer that Gurjara-deśa had become a separate province in any sense. Throughout, in language and culture, it was one with Māraṇḍa, Mālvā and Rājputāna. Ujjayinī and Mathurā continued actively to influence it. The forces making for Indian unity which were at work at the end of the Gupta period ruled unimpaired. The only important fact to be noted, however, is that Pāṭāṇa had become the most powerful city in the whole area, attracting not only power and heroism, but learning, art and culture.

Gujarāta had an art of its own. Painting of the Ajanta style was popular. Mussalman invaders have destroyed all but a few of the noble temples which local art had reared; but the superb art of the temples at Mt. Ābu and of the ruins at Modherā and other places had its rival nowhere in India. Solana, the architect of Vastupāla's temples at Ābu, may be justly ranked as one of the world's greatest artists.

Gujarāta had great libraries in Jaina and Pāsūpata monasteries. The Jaina works, composed during the period, are numerous, and indicate great intellectual activity of this sect. The works of the Brāhmaṇas which have come down to us, few though they are, also indicate an equally intensive activity.

Saṁskṛta was the language of the court and culture. It made the contact of Pāṭāṇa with the culture of the country real; in fact, it made Gujarāta only a constituent of a great cultural unit. It strengthened and inspired all influences which, even as they slowly percolated to the lower strata of life, maintained intact the spirit and the form of Āryan life. The influence of the Epics, the Purāṇas, the Smṛtis, and the classical works like those of Kālidāsa, entered deep into men's life, making ancient India a living model for the present. And, during the time of Kumārapāla, we find a short-lived but successful experiment at introducing the ethical principle of ahinsā in the actual governance of the state. The spread of this doctrine resulted in making life more tolerant, gentle and pure. Great in war and peace, Gujarāta, was no less great in its expression of the spirit of Āryan culture through the life of its people.

Saṁskṛta literature was assiduously cultivated. Someśvara was a poet and a man of letters; he had his literary inspiration from Kālidāsa and Māgha. That Vastupāla, should have spent his leisure in composing a mahākāvya and Pralhādana in composing a vyāyoga drama, shows how literary traditions dominated statesmen and warriors. No doubt literary inspiration, on account of the artificial tendencies of the age, lacked vitality. Kāvya had lost in dignity and self-restraint, and could ill-conceal the motive which underlay the courtier-poet's literary efforts. But one noteworthy feature distinguished this literature from that which was to follow. It had the thrill of a heroic age; its outlook on literature was neither morbid, nor other-worldly. The Apabhraṁśa and the Old Gujāratī literature provide ample evidence to show that life was not only heroic, but joyous and free.

V

But a calamity, in its destructiveness more terrible than a cataclysm of Nature, suddenly brought this period to an abrupt end. The Mussalman invaders laid waste the country and destroyed the strength, the learning, and the glory of Gujarāta.

PART II
OLD GUJARĀTĪ

A. C. 1297-1852

CHAPTER I.

A CENTURY OF CHAOS: OLD GUJARĀTĪ AND ITS EARLY LITERATURE (1297-1400).

The Mussalman occupation—The migrations—The waning influence of Samskr̥ta—Early literature in des'abhāshā, Old Gujarātī—Literature in the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries—The evolution of the language—Folksongs and rāsa dance—The des'ī tunes—Rāsa as a literary composition. Fāga poems—Nemināthacatushpadikā (1269)—Somasuṇḍara (1374-1446)—Raṅga sāgara Nemiṇāga—Fāgu by Natarshi (1439)—Prose—Tarunaprabha (1355)—Prithvīcandracarita (1422)—Legends of Hemacandra—Prabandhacintāmaṇi.

With the death of Viśaladeva in 1261, the glory of Gujarāta departed; and a period of unsettled existence was followed by a century (1300-1400) of catastrophic events, which changed the face of the whole country.

In 1297 Ulughkhan, the brother of All-a-uddin, invaded Gujarāta, and captured Anahilavādā Pāṭaṇa, which thenceforward became a permanent camp of the army of occupation. The viceroys of the Sultans of Delhi sallied forth from it, now and again, to plunder, to destroy, and to carry fire and sword in every direction. Most of the tributary kings and the grandees who had made the court of the great Vāghelā so illustrious were either put to death or forced to embrace Islam. Some stood their ground and fought with grim despair.

Soon, however, the viceroys rebelled against the authority of Delhi, and the amirs, in their turn, against the authority of the viceroys; and, in consequence, confusion prevailed everywhere. Occasionally, the imperial presence supported by a strong army was required to bring a recalcitrant viceroy to his senses. Ultimately in 1391, Zafar khan, a Rajput, a convert, was sent by Mahmūd Shah II to Gujarāta to bring to book Farhat-ul-Mulk, the governor of the province. Zafar Khan spread carnage wherever he went. He defeated the governor, and having conquered the country, elevated his son Mahmūd to the sultanate of Gujarāta. When Mahmūd died in 1403, Zafar Khan, with the title of Muzafar Shah, ruled the country for a few years.

In 1411 his grandson, Ahmed Shah, transferred the capital to the town which he named Ahmedābād after himself.

I

About 1300 Gujarāta was very prosperous. "Besides Cambay, the most celebrated of the cities of Hind in population and wealth," records a foreign traveller, "there are 70000 towns and villages, all populous, and the people abounding in wealth and luxuries."¹ But during the following century, Gujarāta received neither respite nor mercy from the invaders. Her shrines were desecrated; her wealth was plundered; her women were violated or kidnapped. Forcible conversion was the mildest alternative offered by the invader to the children of the soil. People migrated from place to place in vain search of security. Many castes, like the Khadāyatās, Nāgaras, Jhārolās and Moḍhas, now settled in different parts of Gujarāta, bear the names of the towns of North Gujarāta from which they migrated at this time. Priests, poets, and sādhus sought refuge in obscure villages, placing themselves beyond the reach of the ruthless destroyer. All that the terrified people could do was to lock up their women-folk indoors, and to barricade their world behind the bulwarks of caste, pancāyata, and mahājana.

The Mussalman conquest brought about a revolutionary change in India. After twelve centuries, royal patronage was withdrawn from Samskr̥ta. Learned assemblies, which maintained its traditions under royal patronage, were dissolved for want of support. Many paṇḍitas fled to sacred places like Kāśī and took to the life of a recluse; the race of poets disappeared. Devout Brāhmaṇas turned for support to their poverty-stricken followers in small towns and villages, and assumed the obscure rôle of family priests or purāṇikas. What was said of the sixteenth century in France could be said of this period. The men whose thoughts were worth preserving did not know how to write, and the men who cultivated the literary art did not think it needful that they should have any thoughts to express.

1. Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. I. 287 n.

II

Learning sought popular support through the medium of Gurjara bhāṣhā, or Gujarātī, which was the spoken language of the people since the eleventh century.¹ Bilhaṇa, the author of Vikramāṅkadevacarita, (1088) evidently referred to it when he ridiculed Gurjaras for their incorrect speech²; and, possibly, Hemacandra had it in mind when, in Kāvyaṅusāsana, he mentioned the grāmya or vulgar variety possessing literature of its own as distinguished from Apabhraṅśa proper.³ Its earliest available literature, which dates back to the twelfth century, clearly indicates pre-existing literature.

From the beginning, it was distinct from Apabhraṅśa; for instance, many of its words were not derived from corresponding words in the older language, and its structure was fundamentally different. And, under conditions created by the invasion and rule of the Mussalmans, it continued to evolve in unbroken continuity till the middle of the nineteenth century, when factors arising from British rule introduced new elements in it. It may, however, be conveniently divided into Old Gujarātī, the language of the pre-British period, and Modern Gujarātī.

IV

The available literature of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries in Old Gujarātī includes the following typical works:

- (1) Bharateśvarabāhubali rāsa by Śālibhadra (1185);
- (2) Jambūsūyamīcarita by Mahendra (1210);
- (3) Revantagīrīrāsa, by Vijayasena, a preceptor of Vastupāla. (c. 1231);
- (4) Nemināthacatushpādikā by Vinaycandra (c. 1269);

1. Vide Note A at the end of the Chapter.

2. कक्षाबन्धं विदधति न ये सर्वदैवाविशुद्धा—

स्तद्भाषन्ते किमपि भजते यद् जुगुप्सास्पदत्वम् ।

तेषां मार्गे परिचयवशादजितं गुर्जराणां

यः संतापं शिथिलमकरोत् सोमनाथं विलोक्य ॥

3. तत्र प्रायः संस्कृतप्राकृतापभ्रंशग्राम्यभाषानिबद्धं महाकाव्यम् ।

.....ग्राम्यापभ्रंशभाषानिबद्धावस्कन्धनकबन्धम् भीमकाव्यादि ।

(5) Ārāḍhanā, a prose note on palm leaf (1274) ;

(6) Bālaśikshā by Samgrāmsiṅha (1280).

Many rāsas and prose stories of the fourteenth century are available. But the works valuable for appreciating the change in the language are :

(7) Pratikramaṇabālāvabodha, by Taruṇaprabha (1355) ; and,

(8) Mugdhāvabodha, a text-book of Saṁskṛta grammar with explanations in Old Gujarātī by Kulamaṇḍana (1394.)

About the same time, flourished Somasundara (1374-1446), and early in the following century, Bhālaṇa (c. 1426-1500), both very important authors in the language.

The fundamental characteristics of Old Gujarātī may be shortly noted.

I. Saṁskṛta, Prākṛta and Apabhraṁśa belong to the class of languages known as synthetic, while Old Gujarātī, from the beginning, exhibits a progressively pronounced tendency to become analytic and drop the inflections.

II. Old Gujarātī develops a phonetic change by which a double consonant is simplified and the preceding vowel is lengthened. This must have been the result of a change of accent.

III. The indistinctly pronounced vowel at the beginning of a word is dropped.

IV. A definite tendency to replace the Apabhraṁśa form of words by its Saṁskṛta equivalent comes into existence.

V. About 1400 એજ begins to be used as an auxiliary verb.

VI. After 1500, as Gujarāta had become a separate kingdom and Pāṭaṇa was no longer a literary centre for Gujarāta as well as Rajputāna, the language spoken in Gujarāta began to develop new features, assuming its modern shape about 1650.¹

IV

The earliest folk literature of the Āryans was associated with the dance called rāsa. Men and women, singing mostly erotic folk-songs, danced to the accompaniment of appropriate movements. Sometimes men alone, very often women by themselves, danced the rāsa. Mathurā was its early home, and long before the Christian era, it came to be associated with Kṛṣṇa, who was believed to have invented it. The Vṛṣṇis, the Sātvats and the Ābhīras, all nomadic tribes, were the first to worship the cowherd hero and invest the rāsa with a semi-religious significance.

1. Vide Note B at the end of the Chapter.

The rāsa produced the early lyrics of the Madhya desā Āryans, whose dialect was the Śaurasenī Prākṛta. It gave birth to folk-tunes which could be sung accompanied by dancing and rhythmic movements, and predominantly influenced, if it did not create, the Saṃskṛta drama. Kṛṣṇa, the hero of the rāsa dance, the naughty cowherd boy, the ardent lover, a god of love more fascinating than Madana himself, became the centre of erotic sentiment and terminology; and popular imagination found for him a lovely bride in Rādhā.

Rāsa also gave the people their principal festive institution. It formed the basis of yātrā, a kind of drama staged by amateurs at fairs and religious festivities, which persisted in spite of the disappearance of the regular drama. Itinerant parties of dancers, male and female, travelled from place to place staging rāsalīlā. The spring festival of Holi resembling the May-Day merriment of Old England, and Madan Utsava or Dola Utsava, a festival in honour of the god of love, provided occasions for rāsa.

Women of Gujarāta have made rāsa, under the name of garabo, a special feature of many festive occasions, particularly during the first ten days of the month of Āśvin sacred to the goddess Āmbā. On such occasions, the women of different localities gather together, and dance in a circle around a burning lamp placed in the centre on an earthen jar, or garabo, singing love lyrics set to popular tunes; and, as they do so, they keep time by clap of hands or with their feet. This is pre-eminently a Gujarātī institution. Śārṅgadhara (c. 1200), in Samgīta-ratnākara, gives a tradition that lāsya dance was taught to the women of Saurāshṭra by Bāṇa's daughter, Ushā, who learnt it from Pārvaṭi, the spouse of god Śaṅkara. Hemacandra refers to rāsaka; and Lakṣamaṇagaṇi (1143) describes it thus :

Some ladies dance rāsa giving time-beats with hands high and low, some smile as their hands move in rhythm.¹

Saptakṣhetrirāsa, an Old Gujarāṭi work (1271), refers to two kinds of rasas: Tāla rāsa in which the rhythmic beat was marked by clapping the hands, and Lakṣṭa rāsa, in which small sticks held in the hands of each dancer were used for the purpose.² Both these forms are still in vogue, and as popular as they were then.

The rāsa dance naturally gave rise to poetic literature depicting Love's conquests in spring, or the loves of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā. It was essentially popular in tone and expression; its great feature was its freedom from strict rules of prosody. Each poem had its own law; and all that was necessary was cadence, and the possibility of its being sung to a popular melody known as rāga, or deśī, local style.³ Such a poem, which could be sung with a rāsa, came to be called a rāsa or a rāsaka, and later, garabī, from the dance, garabo.

The rāsa sung in the spring festival or fāga was itself called fāga. The fāga poems describe the glories of the spring, the lovers and their dances, and give a glimpse of the free and joyous life of Gujarāṭa before the fourteenth century. The earliest available fāga in Old Gujarāṭi is Sthūlibhadrafāga (1324).

But the word rāsa changed its meaning about the end of the eleventh century; it came to be used for a long composition giving a sustained narrative in rhymed verse, partly in old Apabhraṃśa metres like duhā and cupāi and partly in deśī melodies. In 1118 Yaśodeva, in his Navatatvabhāṣya, refers to such a rāsa even in Apabhraṃśa. Hemacandra calls a similar composition

1. કેવિ ઉત્તલતાલાડલં રાસયં કુળાહિં કરનિચ્ચિયં અવરિ વરહાસયં ।

2. તીછે તાલારસ પડેઢુ બહુ ભાટ પઢેતા ।

અનહ લકુટારસ જોડેઢુ યેલા નાચંતાં. ॥

3. Vide Appendix I.

a mahākāvya. Bharateśvarabāhubali rāsa by Śālibhadra, the first available rāsa in Old Gujarātī, is dated 1145. At first, perhaps, the popular caritas and dharmakathās were called rāsas; later, all poems in this form came to be known as rāsas irrespective of the subject which they treated, and were sung by men and women on festive occasions. Jaina literature of this kind became stereotyped. New authors did nothing but turn the works of their predecessors in Saṁskṛta, Prākṛta, Apabhraṁśa, and even Old Gujarātī, into rāsas.

A love poem, set to popular tunes, was another poetic form. The earliest specimen of such a poem is Nemināthacatushpadikā (c. 1269). It is a love-lament of Rājala on her separation from Neminātha. She describes her feelings as they vary with each month of the year.

Rājala weeps, as she sees the lakes full of water in the month of Bhādrapada. "O source of all kindness! Why have you left me, lonely and helpless?"

Her friend replies, "Do not weep. He is heartless and will never be yours; otherwise, having reared a tree, he would not set fire to it; having carried you to the top of a mountain, he would not throw you down."

Rājala replies, "You speak truly. In these rains, the lakes burst their bounds, the sea tosses about, and the mountains are worn away; but the dark-hearted beloved does not relent."¹

In a similar vein the poem refers successively to the other months of the year. Later, similar poems were very popular under the name of bāra māsī, literature of the twelve months.

V

The first notable author in Old Gujarātī appeared at the beginning of the fifteenth century. Somasundara (1374-1446), a sādhu of great literary attainments composed explanatory works in prose on religious and philosophic treatises. His Raṅgasāgara Nemifāga is a charming poem.

1. भाद्रवि भरिया सर पिक्खेवि सकरुण रोअइ राजलदेवि ।
 हा एकलडी मइ निरधार किम ऊवेषिसि करुणासार ॥
 भणइ सखी राजल मन रोइ नीहुरु नेमि न अप्पणु होइ ।
 सिंचिय तरुवर परि पलवंति गिरिवर पुण कड डेरा हुंति ॥
 साचउं सखि वरि गिरि भिज्जंति किमइ न भिज्जइ सामलंकांति ।
 वण वरिसंतइ सर फुटंति सायरु पुण वणुओइ डुलंति ॥

Then, in spring full of the fragrance of the sweet Mādhavi creeper, is born Rati, the goddess of love. Trees take up weapons of flowers and start to fight the love-lorn. Madana enters the battlefield and blows his trumpet, the Malaya breeze. Bees, his soldiers, bustle about, and cuckoos sound a clarion call...

All gardens begin to bear the weapons of the god who shoots flower-arrows. Bees spread everywhere.

When people, fascinated, see bees sitting on a Sevanti flower, they say that Rāhu has eclipsed the moon.

Another short and interesting poem of the kind is Vasantavilāsa, The Joys of Spring, believed to have been composed in the beginning of the fifteenth century. The poem was found in an illuminated manuscript containing paintings in the style of Ajantā, which was favoured by the Gujarāti painters of the time.¹ A love-lorn bride, oppressed by the fresh beauties of the spring, expresses her feelings thus :

Stop, friend cuckoo. Why sing so much ? I am forlorn; my lord is far away ; I cannot take delight in pleasure. My garland is a burden on my breast. Friend, ornaments are like blazing fire to me. Perfume does not attract me ; nor does the moon fascinate me. Friend, my body is athrob with pain ; fine raiment no longer charms me ; my food is tasteless to-day ; even sweet water tastes flat.

Full moon, why do you give me pain ? Why ? Dark-spotted one, why kill a helpless woman ? Consider well : if you kill me, it will be sinful.

Bee, why not leave me alone ? My body is frail. Moon ! Torturer ! We have no old scores to pay.²

1. N. C. Mehta, Studies in Indian Painting. Chapter II.

2. रहि रहि तोरीजो, अलि कोइली स्यूं बहु वांसि ।
 नाहु अजी नवि आवइ, भावइं मूं न विलास ॥
 हार ते भार मूं उंर वरि, सइरि शङ्गार अङ्गार ।
 चीत हरइ नवि चन्दन, चन्द नहि मनोहार ॥
 सखि दीह दूख अनीठऊं, दीठऊं गमइ न चीर ।
 भोजन आज ऊछीठऊं, मीठऊं सदइ न नीर ॥
 सकल कला तूं निशाकर, शा करं सइरि संताप ।
 अबला म मारि कलङ्की, शङ्की हुवइ पापु ॥
 भमरला छांडि न पाखल, थ्यां अह्न सइर ।
 चांदुला सइर संतापण, आपण तां नहि वइर ॥

Fāga, composed by Natarshi (c. 1439), expressing the joys of spring, is an excellent specimen of fāga literature.

The month of Fāga has begun. Spring has come; the good people are full of joy; Malaya breezes blow; Kāma has been wielding his weapons.

Rāsaka

The sylvan goddess came and besought the Lord. "The ten quarters have assumed new forms; Kāmadeva is coming to embrace you, Kṛṣṇa, Lord Murāri, pray come."

Having heard this, the Lord was pleased and looked at his friends; and with his friends, the Yādava went to the forest.

Maidens, bowed with the weight of their breasts, move like elephants excited with passion; their anklets tinkle and the broad head-ornaments shine.

Their braided hair look as if a cobra had nestled there; vying with the colour of their lips, corals acknowledge defeat.

Āndola

Gopīs begin to dance; hand-drums are played upon; bending their beautiful bodies, they dance to the accompaniment of rhythmic movements. Sārṅgadhara, the best of his family, plays the flute.

They sing new songs of spring to the melody of the s'rīrāga; they keep time with their feet. Sārṅgadhara plays the flute.

In their hands, gopīs hold lotus-stems; they wave them over their heads; to every tune, they keep time. And Sārṅgadhara plays the flute.

As the moon shines among the stars, so does Mukunda among gopīs; gods, men and Indra bow down to him in worship. Sārṅgadhara plays the flute.

Fāga

The best of cowherds, Mukunda, and the gopīs wander about in the forest, playing; and the forest, inspired by the breeze, bows low to Murāri.¹

1.

फागु

आविय मास वसंतक, संत करइ उत्साह ।
मलयानिल महि बायउ, आयउ काम गिदाह ॥

रासक

वणवरि आविय प्रभु वीनविउ, नवि दसइ दिसारी रे ।
माधव माधव भेटणे आवइ, आवित देव मुरारि रे ॥
वात सुणी प्रभु मणि अति हरखिय, निरखिय गृहपरिवार रे ।
निज परिवारि ई जादव पुहुतु, बहु तु वनह मझारि रे ॥
पण भरि नमती तरुणी करुणी, वरुणी चरण संचारि रे ।
चालइ चमकत झमकत नेउर, केउर कटक विशाल रे ॥

The literature of the deśabhāṣā possessed an artistic beauty of its own, though it was largely influenced by works like Gita-govinda, or, as is more likely, by older songs.

VI

The Jaina sādhus popularised their teachings by means of prose kathās, some of which have been preserved. The prose which they used was highly developed, racy and expressive. It possessed a rhythmic charm peculiar to itself, and, often, was embellished with literary graces borrowed from Saṁskṛta works like Kādambarī. The style of Taruṇa-prabha, (1355), the first author of merit in prose we know of, is remarkable for vigour, grace and felicity of expression. His Parikramaṇabālā-vabodha, intended to illustrate the ethical doctrines of the Jainas, is well told.

Somasundara's Upadeśamālā and Yogaśāstra contain numerous tales in prose, which, though less rhetorical than Taruṇa-prabha's, show ease and rhythm. The stories written for the young, the ignorant and the credulous are simple, full of miracles, and inspired by a hatred of the Brāhmaṇa, the sadhu's age-long and successful rival in religion, letters and politics.

A cunning Brāhmaṇa, of Ujjayinī by name Aghoraśiva, went to the land of tanners. He met thieves. He said to them, "I am assuming the garb of a muni to pass myself off as an ascetic; praise me that the people may be

वेणिय वयणि मिषतरि, भितरि रहिउ सिरि नाग ।

अघररंग परवालिय, आलिय नावई भाग ॥

आंदोल

नाचई गोपिय वृंद, वाई मधुर मृदंग ।

मोडई अंग सुरंग, सारंगधर वाइत महुयरी ऐ, कुलवण महुयरी ए ॥

कर लिई पंकज नाल, सिरि वरि फेरई बाल ।

छंदिहि बाजई ताल, सारंगधर ०

तारा माहि जिम चंद, गोपिय माह मुकुंद ।

पणमई सुरनर इंद, सारंगधर ०

फागु

गोपिय गोपति क्रीडत, हींडत वनह मझारि ।

मारुत प्रेरित वन भर नमई मुरारि ॥ deceived." The thieves consented. Thereafter, the Brāhmaṇa, assuming an ascetic's garb, went and lived in a forest between three villages. The thieves began to praise him to the people; they said that he had been fasting for a month and induced the people to worship him.

The people invited him to meals. Believing him to be an ascetic, they told him of their wealth and consulted him about their future gains and other affairs. Having come to know of the wealth of the people, he joined the other thieves and broke open their houses at night.

Once, one of the thieves was caught. On being beaten, he disclosed the names of the other thieves. The people captured all of them and punished them. As the Brāhmaṇa had been in the garb of an ascetic, they gouged out his eyes and drove him away. Afflicted by pain and and censured by people, he felt contrition for his acts. He died and went to hell. Thus he who deceives others, lives to be sorry for his acts.¹

But a much more artistic piece of prose dharmakathā is Pr̥thvicandracaritra by Māṇikyacandra (1422). The story is exceedingly well-told. Apart from the conventional lists of weapons, sciences, etc., it contains some excellent description, revealing a rare sense of proportion. The language is more elaborate than Taruṇaprabha's or Soma-sundara's, and more musical. The sentences are constructed with a sure eye to rhetoric and balance, and, at places, attain poetic cadence. Very often, the sentences are broken up into clauses, the last words of which rhyme.

In Chapter I the rivers, the mountains and the countries of the world, and the city of Paithāṇa in Mahārāshtra, its

1. उज्जयनी नगरीइं अघोरशिव ईसि नामि धूर्त ब्राह्मण चर्मकार देशि गिओ ।
 चोररहइं मिलइं । ईसिउं कहइ-हुं मुनिवेष लेई तपस्वी थाउं छउं । तुह्म्यो मुजन्हइं
 वषाणियो जिम सुखिं लोक वंचाइ । चोरे मानिउं । पछइं ते ब्राह्मण परिव्राजकनु वेष
 करी त्रिहुं गाम विचालइं वनमाहिं थई रहिओ । चोर लोक देशतां वखाणइं तेहनइं ।
 ए मासोपवास करइं तापस—इम कहि तेहनइं पूजा करावइं । लोक तेहनइं
 घरि तेडी जिमाडइं । महा तापस भणी मानता आपणा घरनी लक्ष्मीनुं स्वरूप
 तेहन्हइं कहइं अनइं आगामीया लाभादिकनउं स्वरूप पूछइं । पछइं ते लोकनी
 लक्ष्मी हेरीनइं रात्रिनइं समइं बीजां चोर साथि लोकनां घर मुंसइं । एकवार तेह माहि-
 लओ एक चोर साहिओ । तीणइं मारीतइं बीजाइं चोर सघलाई कहिया । लोके सघ-
 लाइं धरीया मारिया । परिव्राजक भणी आंषि काढी मूँकिओ । पछइं ते वेदनाक्रांत
 हुंतओ लोके निर्दीतु पश्चात्ताप करइं । मरी नरगि गिओ । इम अनेक ऊ जिको वंचइं ते इम शोचइं—पश्चात्ताप करइं ॥

markets and its jewels are described in detail. Prṥhvicandra, the king, sees a dream.

What kind of dream? The king saw a damsel who had the golden hue of royalty, tempting even to gods; she had jingling anklets, shining earrings, a garland in her hand, a broad forehead like the crescent moon.¹

As she throws a garland on his neck, the king wakes up. Next day he holds his court; and the author enumerates his officers and describes his court. A messenger from Ayodhyā arrives, who describes the country of Kośala, its capital, its king Somadeva, his queen, and their accomplished daughter, Ratnamañjarī, versed in seventy-two arts.

Chapter II begins with the description of the monsoon.

The monsoon, enemy of travellers, then began to blow; famine disappeared. In the rains, lively thunder issued from the clouds, and the famine-stricken became fearless as if the drums of victory had announced a generous king. In all quarters, lightning flashed; travellers ran home. The sky became fearful; the sun and the moon developed a nimbus. The nights were dark; the insects sang. The storm from the north spread; the heavens were overcast. The quarters of the sky were dark; peacocks danced. Rain poured in torrents; waters flowed noisily; creepers covered the hedges. Carts, ploughing through the mud, got stuck; people turned their thoughts to God. Rivers were flooded, overflowing their banks. Saplings sprouted; foliage danced. Farmers rejoiced; religious teachers read the scriptures; streams ran down mountains; and lakes, filled to the brim, overflowed.²

King Somadeva goes to see a lake. The Brāhmaṇas are invited, and the Purāṇas and the Smṛtis, which are enumerated, are recited. Ratnamañjarī comes to the lake. A

1. किसिउं ते स्वप्न ? इसिउं-जाणइ नरेश्वर सुवर्णवर्णकांति, देवरहई मन भ्रांति, षलकते नेउरि, झलकते कुंडलि, हाथि वरमाल, अर्द्धचंद्रसमभाल, रूपि विशाल, इसी बालदेवी देषइ भूपाल ।

2. विस्तरिउ वर्षाकाल, जे पंथीतणउ काल, नाठउ दुकाल । जीणिइ वर्षाकालि मधुरध्वनि मेह गाजइ, दुर्भिक्षतणा भय भाजइ, जाणे सुभिक्षभूपति आवतां जयडक्का वाजइ । चिहुं दिसि बीज झलहलइ, पंथी घरभणी पुलइ । विपरीत आकाश, चंद्रसूर्य परियास । राति अंधारी, लवई तिमिरी । उत्तरनउ ऊनयण, छायाउ गयण । दिसि घोर, नाचई मोर । सधर, वरसइ धाराधर । पाणीतणा प्रवाह षलहलई, वाडि ऊपरि वेला वलई । चीषलि चालतां शकट स्खलई, लोकतणां मन धर्म्मऊपरि वलई । नदी महापूरि आवई, पृथ्वीपीठ झावई । नवां किसलय गहगहई, वल्लीवितान लहलहई । कुटुंबीलोक माचइ, महात्मा बड्ठां पुस्तक वाचई । पर्वततउ नीक्षरण विछूटई, भरियां सरोवर फूटई । इसिइ वर्षाकालि राजा सोमदेवतणऊं कराविउ सरोवर भराणुं, समुद्रसमाणउं ।

swan, lovely like a heap of kunda flowers, flies from the lake and alights on the king's hand. The princess, moved by curiosity, takes it in her hands. The swan suddenly flies away with her. The king's efforts to recover the princess meet with no success. Then comes spring, and the king again goes to the lake. He is presented with a lotus, from which Ratnamañjarī emerges. The restoration is duly celebrated, and the joy of the people is fully described. The king then decides to hold a svayaṃvara for his daughter and invites all eligible suitors; and the messenger has come to Prthvīcandra with the invitation.

Prthvīcandra starts for the svayaṃvara with his troops, chariots and horses; traverses a forest; and halts before a city. Suddenly, a man runs up to him and falls at his feet. The warders of the city, in pursuit of the man, ask the king to give him up as he is a thief. Prthvīcandra declines to surrender him; and, thereupon, Samaraketu, the king of the city, marshalls his army for battle. The two armies meet, and Prthvīcandra, thanks to divine aid, is victorious. Samaraketu lies at his feet, a chained slave.

In Chapter III the fugitive who was pursued as a thief tells his story.

In Aṅgadeśa is situate the city of Śrīpura, where lived a merchant. Laxmi-dhara, full of wealth. I, Śrīpati, am his son, but my luck was bad. Our wealth was ten crores, but it disappeared with my father. Father died; and, after his death, what was in the ship sank in the sea. Some wealth was misappropriated by the servants; what was in the shop was stolen by thieves. Whatever was in different places was lost. Some was taken away by the king. All wealth was gone; one lac alone remained.

Then I left all other work, and began to load a ship. On an auspicious day, the ship was loaded. Three hundred and sixty kinds of spices were in it; seven kinds of sweets were on board; seven kinds of pickles were stored; the casks were filled. The God of the sea and the crew were worshipped. The drums were beaten and trumpets blown. Fisherwomen began to dance; the mast was erected; the anchor was weighed; the sails were spread; the sailor in charge began to throw out water collected in the boat; the helmsman sat holding the sheet; the captain sat in the bow. Oars were plied. The helmsman began to steer; the pilot, to look after the ship. The gods were happy; the sea echoed back the music.

We went further; cold winds blew; and the sky was overcast with clouds. Furious gales blew; the sea became stormy. The waves rose sky high; the frightened people became sea-sick. The waves rose higher and the cargo was lost. Some one said, "Oh! Luck"; others began to pray to the gods. The ship dashed against a rock and was wrecked. Śrīpati found a plank. Clinging to it, he came to the shore after three days.¹

Śrīpati then meets an ascetic who demands his head. Frightened, he runs away, comes to the city, and is pursued by the city guards.

He now wants to give up the world, tired of its injustice. Samaraketu, after listening to his experiences, catches the infection and wants to give up his throne. Prthvicandra asks him to accept the worship of Jīna. In the meantime, a sādhu comes along and Samaraketu accepts the Jaina faith.

Prthvicandra proceeds to Ayodhyā. He is received by Somadeva and, when he attends the svayamvara, outshines all the kings present. Ratnamañjarī comes dressed for the occasion, and the suitors are introduced to her. Ultimately, she accepts Prthvicandra as her husband.

In Chapter IV King Dhūmaketu, angry at being passed over by Ratnamañjarī, raises an army of demons. Confusion follows; darkness spreads everywhere; and in the morning, the princess is found to have disappeared. Every one is anxious until the earth opens, and a divine woman

1. અંગદેશિ શ્રીપુરિનગર, તિહાં શ્રેષ્ઠિ લક્ષ્મીધર, શ્રીલક્ષ્મીદેં સધર । તેહતણુ પુત્ર હું.
શ્રીપતિ, પણિ વિષમ દેવગતિ । દસકોહિ દ્રવ્ય ઢૂંતી, પણિ વાપુજીસાથિ પહુતી । પિતા
પરોક્ષ દૂઆ પૂઠિં જં વાહનમાહિ ઘાતિં, તં સમુદ્ર સાતિં । કઈં વાળઉત્રે ગ્રસિં,
હાટ ચોરે મુસિં । થલવટનં થલવટઈ રહિં, કાંઈં ઠાકુર ગ્રહિં । ઘર બલિં, સમગ્ર
મંડાળ ટલિં । સમગ્ર દ્રવ્ય નિસ્તરિં, એકલક્ષ દ્રવ્ય ડગરિં । પછઈ અવર કાજકામ
છાંડિં । પ્રવહણ પૂરિવા માંડિં । મલઈ દિવસિ પ્રવહણ પૂરિં । ત્રિત્રિ સઈં સાઠિ
ક્રિયાણાં ચઢાવ્યા, સપ્તવિધ પકવાન ચઢાવ્યાં, સપ્તવિધ કરંવા લિયા, પોતા સપાળી
મરિયા, દેવસમુદ્ર વાયસ પૂજાવ્યા । ષામિલ માદલ વાજિવા લાગાં, બાબરિ કોલણિ
નાચેવા લાગી, ગલેલા હેલાહેલ કરવા લાગા । કૂડપંમડ ડમડ કીધડ, નાંગર
ડપાડિં, સિઢ તાડિં, ધામતીડ ધામત ડલીચઈવા લાગુ, વાઠરીઠ તલિ પડિં, ડાંગર
ડાંગર નાલિ બડિં । આડલાં પડઈં, સૂકાળી સૂકાળ ચાલવઈં, માલિમ વાહણ
જાલવઈં, સુરવર લહલહ્યા, વાદિત્રનાદિ સમુદ્ર ગાજી રહ્યા । દિવ આગલિ જાતાં ઢૂંતા
ચિલીવાય વાયાં, આકાશિ ઢૂઈં મેઘછાયા । ડડિં પવન પ્રવલ, સમુદ્ર ઢૂડ ડચ્છંચલ ।
કલ્લોલ આકાશિ ડપડઈં, બીહતાં લોકરહઈં ઢીંબા ચડઈં । વેલ લામી, વસ્તુ વામી । એક
હા દૈવ ! કરઈ, એક દેવધ્યાન ધરઈં । વાહણ પર્વતિ આફલી ભાગં, શ્રીપતિઈ હાથિ
પાટીડ લાગં । તેહનઈ આધારિ તરતડ તરતડ, ત્રિહુ દિવસિ પારિ આવિં ।

seated on a throne brings back Ratnamañjarī. Pṛthvīcandra then marries the princess; and rejoicings follow.

Pṛthvīcandra and Somadeva soon thereafter listen to a recital of the life of Dharmnātha Tīrthaṅkara, from which they receive religious inspiration. Pṛthvīcandra and Ratnamañjarī return to Paṭhaṇa, where, in course of time, a son is born to them. The king then takes Jaina vows.

VII

In spite of the loss of royal patronage, the sādhus continued to pursue their literary activities in Saṁskṛta, which, however, left the classic groove and ran in popular channels. Following the footsteps of Hemacandra and Somaprabha, they created a new mythology for their faith out of the legends of Kumārapāla and Hemacandra, many of which had already attained absurd proportions. The works belonging to this period which have been the main source for later literature of its kind are: (1) Prabhāvakacaritra by Prabhācandra and Pradyumna (1278); (2) Prabāṇdhacintāmaṇi by Merutuṅga (1303-1306); and (3) Caturviṁśatiprabāṇdha by Rājasékhara (1348-49). The first is a collection of twenty-two legendary lives of Jaina teachers and includes one of Hemacandra. The second contains a series of episodes concerning, among others, Vikrama, Śalivāhana, Vanarāja, Muñja of Dhārā, Bhoja of Ujjayinī, Bhīma, Siddharāja, Kumārapāla and Hemacandra. The third is on the same lines as the second.

Prabāṇdhacintāmaṇi is by far the best of the three in style and treatment, as also in wealth of historical material. Though mainly in Saṁskṛta prose, it contains interesting quotations from Apabhraṁśa literature. The language is at places full of inaccuracies and deśī words, and the work, as a whole, is not of a high literary order. The anecdotes are full of anachronisms, omissions and bias, making them unreliable as historical documents. But the author never pretended to write any history.

The old stories do not delight persons of understanding as they have heard them very often; hence, I am compiling this Prabāṇdhacintāmaṇi which contains detailed information about the good men who lived nearer our times. All prabāṇdhas, as the learned recite them according to their understanding, become different in character; clever people, therefore, should not criticise this work, as it is based on good tradition.

As centuries passed, the historical prabandhas ceased to have any element of history in them and deteriorated even from the literary point of view. The only other important work of this kind in Saṁskṛta, produced during this age, is Kumārāpālacaritra by Jayasinha (1360). Kumārāpālaprabandha by Jinamaṇḍana (1436) and Vastupālacarita by Jina-hansa are similar works.

Note A. Gujarātī

The word, Gujarāta, as applied to the land is very old. Al Beruni (970-1030), the Arab traveller, knew it as Guzrata; Marco Polo (1254-1324) applied it to a territory which included modern Gujarāta; Ambadevasūri,¹ author of Samarayāsa (1315) and Rājasekharasūri, (1348)² knew the province by that name, Padmanābha (1456) used the word Gujarāta, as also the adjective Gujarātī.³

Its desābhāṣā was referred to by Bhāṣa (c. 1426-1500) as Apabhraṁśa or Gurjarbhāṣā⁴; by Markaṇḍeya in his Prākṛtasarvasva (c. 1450) as Gaurjari Apabhraṁśa⁵; By Padmanābha (1456) as Prākṛta⁶; by Narasinha Mehtā (1450 or 1550?) as Apabhrasṭa girā⁷; by Akho (1650) as Prākṛta, or Bhāṣā.⁸ Premānanda (c. 1640-1750) was perhaps the first to call it Gujarātī⁹; and, for the first time, it was so styled by foreign visitors about the same time (1731).¹⁰ These names were used generally to distinguish it from Saṁskṛta, the language of culture.

With a view, however, to find a place for it in a scheme of Indian languages, modern scholars have tried to invent new names for it. Dr. Tessori calls it Old Western Rājasthānī from the area in which it was spoken; Narsinhrao Divatia calls it Gaurjari Apabhraṁśa¹¹; D. B. Keshavlal Dhruva,

-
1. आविउ गुजरात.
 2. गूजरातेति ख्यातदेशं ।
 3. गूजरातिनु भोजनकरं; गूजराति ते कहीइ किसी.
 4. गुजर भाषाए नळराजाना गुण मनोहर गाउं ; कथा मात्र ए नहषधरानीं अपभ्रंस ए दाखी.
 5. संस्कृतादयाच गौर्जरी ।
 6. प्राकृतबंध कवित मति करी
 7. अपभ्रष्ट गिराविशे काव्य केवुं दीसे.
 8. भाषाने शुं वळगे भूर ; काइ प्राकृतमांथी नाशी गयुं.
 9. बोधु नागदमण गुजराती भाषा.
 10. La Croze, LSI, IX. Pt. II, 333.
 11. 1914 I. A.

Middle Gujarati, Apabhraṃśa being named Early Gujarātī.² Grierson calls it Gujarātī.

Why is not the word, Gujarātī, used by Premānanda himself, correct and appropriate?

Note B. Evolution of Old Gujarātī.

Generally speaking, in the synthetic stage of a language the particles added to a noun to form case-endings are not separable, but are incorporated in the word itself, with the result that the terminal syllable is varied as in Saṃskṛta. In the analytic stage, the word stands without any termination and an auxiliary word is tacked on to express the relations denoted by the termination.

The changes described in the text are illustrated with special reference to the works mentioned on pages 85 and 86.

I. The nominative case termination in Skt. is the visarga, e. g., चंद्रः. In Apa. it is उ, e. g., चासु भणइ; the same, in Old Guj. No. 1 (1185); it is optionally dropped in No. 2 (1210), e. g., सीस भणइ. The option is continued till it is dropped in No. 8 (1394) e. g., चंद्र उणइ.

The objective case termination in Skt. is स् e. g., चंद्रस्; it is उ in Ap. and in No. 1 (1185); it is optional in No. 2 (1210) e. g., चरित पढइ. The option is also found in No. 8 (1394) e. g., जीव संसार तरइ and कितउं तरइ, संसार.

The instrumental case termination survived even in Old Guj., e. g., धर्मिइ तरइ in No. 8 (1394); in Mod. Guj. an optional form is used with a proposition, e. g., धर्मથી or धર્મે તરેછે.

The dative case termination in Pkt. was हितो e. g., कहन्तिहु; in Ap., हुतहु; in Old Guj. it is optional with इणि कारणी in No. 7 (1355). नइ कारणि is continued in No. 8 (1394). Thereafter the case termination is no longer used. The preposition ने, which is used, is derived from Pkt. thus: लगि-लइ-नई-ने and is, perhaps, similar to Marāṭhī ला and Nepālī ङै. According to Narsinhrao, it is derived from Skt. तन-तण-तुं-ने.

The ablative termination in Skt. is formed by अत् e. g., रामात्; by होन्तउ in Apa.; by हुतुं in No. 2 (1210); by इतउ, उतउ in No. 7 (1355); by जेहतउ, हुंतउ, or the preposition थउ, थकउं in No. 8 (1394). थी-थकउ are derived from Skt. स्थित and स्थकित, and their use marks the analytic stage of the language. Bhālāṇa (1450) uses थी-थकी; some others, स्थकी. The optional use of हुतुं is continued till the end of the XVII century in Jaina works.

The genitive case termination in Skt. is स्य; in Ap. it is हो e. g., कंयहो; is इ in No. 2 (1210) e. g., वीरजिणिदइ तीथि. But the preposition तणउ, अहनउ and नउ from Skt. तन is also used in Ap. It is used in Old Guj. in No. 1

1. He dates the beginning of Gujarati from 1494 (1550 A. V.) Early Gujarātī 1494-1594; Middle Gujarātī 1594-1694; Modern Gujarātī thereafter. Gujarati Language and Literature, Vol. II, p. 9, 129.

2. Presidential Address, Sahitya Parishad Report, Vol. II.

(1145), e. g., भरत नरिंदह तणउचरितो, and in No. 2 (1202); and displaces the termination in No. 5 (1274). It becomes एहनउ, तणउ, in No. 8 (1394), e. g., चेत्रतणउ; and तणो and ना in Kāhnaḍadeprabandha (1456). Both these latter forms have come down to Mod. Guj. Another preposition used for the purpose is derived from Skt. कृत. It becomes कर in Ap.; एहरहइ in No. 8 (1394); survives as केरो in Bhālāṇa (c. 1450) and as केरो in Māravadi; and is still used in poetry and in some adjectives in Mod. Guj. e. g., सोनेरी, रुपेरी. It is found in Bengali अमार.

II. No. 6 (1280) shows that the change referred to in para II p. 86 had come to stay e. g., गाजइ for गज्जइ Ap. and गर्जति Skt. बाप for बप्प Ap.

III. No. 6 (1280) has बइसइ for उवइसइ Ap., and उपविशति Skt. The same work uses अच्छइ as in Apa. for अस्ति Skt.; but it becomes छइ in No. 7 (1355).

IV. वयण Ap. is replaced by वदन Skt.; similarly, मयण by मदन, मणोरह by मनोरथ.

V. Bhālāṇa (c. 1450) and Padmanābha in (c. 1456) first use छइ as auxiliary.

VI. (a) About 1650 the final अइ or इ became ए, the final अउ or उ became ओ. छइ became छे; घोडउ Old Guj. became घोडो.

(b) The penultimate इ or उ became अ; कट्टिन turned to कट्टण, लुणइ to लण. This change was effected about 1700.

(c) About 1700, स when preceding इ, ए, य became श e. g., बेसीने-बेशीने; and ल became ल e. g., मलवुं-मळवुं. In South Gujarāta the change has not been effectively introduced even now.

(d) The passive इयइ became आय e. g., करीयइ, Old Guj., was replaced by कराय.

(e) Between 1450 and 1650 various other changes came into existence by which

(i) The syntactical concord was changed to fit into a later idiom, e. g. the concord in the passive voice of verbs in the past tense as in Skt. was used by Bhālāṇa and Premānanda, but, later, this is altered and the object is put in as in dative with ने. दिहुं नहीं तेणि व्याधि हुं (Bhālāṇa) would be now ते व्याधि मने दिहो नहीं. कहें दुपदी हुं भले दाळी (Premānanda) would be कहे दुपदी मने भले दाळी;

(ii) An idea conveyed by an earlier grammatical form was altered in its later form, e. g., the sense of the passive future third person singular form is altered to the active future first person singular. कथयिष्यति Skt. कहिश्श Old Guj. (It will be told) is changed to कहिश्. (I will tell).

For a detailed philological discussion vide the Wilson Philological Lectures by Narsinhrao Divatia, entitled Gujarati Language and Literature, Vol. II.

CHAPTER II.

PADMANĀBHA AND THE HEROIC POETRY IN OLD GUJARĀTĪ.

Heroic poetry—Raṇamallachanda (c. 1400)—Padmanābha (1456)—Kāhnaṇḍeprabandha—Its value.

As it appears from the verses already quoted from Hemacandra's works, Gujarāta had heroic poetry in Apabhraṇśa reflecting its martial spirit in the days of the Cālukyās and Vāghelās. A similar literature in Old Gujarātī has all but disappeared; only two poems give an idea of its nature. They provide a brilliant picture of the epic heroism displayed by Gujarāta when it grimly contested every inch of ground with the invader.

I

The first poem, Raṇamallachanda, is a short ballad, composed about 1400 by Śrīdhara, celebrating the heroic deeds of Raṇamalla of Idara. It consists of seventy stanzas in metres like cupāi and duhā, and is the earliest work of a kind which has been a favourite of the bards. This literature, principally panegyrical, is composed in metres which lend themselves to recitation with considerable dramatic force. The language is very often archaic and strongly alliterative. Sometimes words are altered out of recognition in the interest of sound effects, and assonances and other verbal tricks abound.

Raṇamalla of Idara, of the Kamadhaja or Rāṭhōḍa family, was a great warrior. About 1397, he harassed Zafar Khan, the viceroy of Pāṭaṇa, and spread terror among the Mussalman chiefs.

As the army of the Sultan bristled with valour Raṇamalla's whiskers flew about with wrath.¹

The Sultan calls upon him to submit. Raṇamalla roars:

If my lotus-like head bows before the Mlechhas' feet, the sun will not rise in the sky. So long as the sun moves in the sky, Kamadhaja will not

1. सिरि फुरमाण धरवि सुरताणी धरदय हालमाल दीवाणी;

bow to a block of stone. Even if the flame of the submarine fire is extinguished, I will not yield an inch of land to the Mlechha.¹

A battle ensues between the two armies, and is described in jingling rhymes. The Mussalmans are routed, and in token of submission the not unusual humiliation of being made to eat grass is forced on them. Raṇamalla begins to think of world-wide conquest, and he says, "I will bring under my control everything on which the sun shines."²

II

Kaṇhaḍadeprabandha (c. 1456) follows a greater literary tradition. It deals with the struggle which Gujarāta made for self-preservation after 1297, and breathes the grim and heroic attitude of mind which prevailed among her people during the fourteenth century. The author, Padmanābha of Viśalanagara, was the poet-laureate of Akherāja, the Cahamāna or Cohāṇa king of Jhālora and a descendant of the hero of the poem. A few manuscripts of the work, luckily mistaken for those of a religious work, were preserved by the Jaina temples. Its language is Old Gujarātī, then spoken all over Western Rājasthāna including Gujarāta. The style, though not as elegant as Bhālaṇā's, maintains a high level of expressiveness. The language is neither trite nor ornate; the interest is well sustained throughout. The author, however, could not resist the temptation of recording in the conventional manner the names of Rajput and Mussalman warriors, and of introducing didactic verses and tedious narrative of past lives. In some places, the chronological order has not been preserved, and the same descriptions appear more than once. As a narrative, it is much better than many other rāsas; and it has the merit of being without religious bias.

III

The poem opens with a prayer, and proceeds to mention Māravāḍa, 'the land of nine forts', and the Sonagirā Cohāṇas

-
1. मुझ सिरकमल मेच्छपय लगइ, तु गयणङ्गमणि भाण व उगइ.
जां अम्बरपुडतलि तरणि रमइ, तां कमधजकन्ध न धगड नमइ.
वरि वडवानल तण झाल शमइ; पुण मेच्छ न आपूं चास किमइ.
 2. ईडरवइ रा रणमल्ल कहि, 'इक्कछत्त रवितलि करूं,'

‘as noble looking as royal swans’. Karpadeva Ghelo ruled in Gujarāta. Being enamoured of Keśava’s wife, he killed the husband and appropriated the wife. The minister Mādhava, Keśava’s brother, moved by wrath, said, “I shall not taste any food in Gujarāta till I bring the Turks here.”¹ On this, the poet feelingly laments :

To the place where he worshipped his God and sang His praises; where he performed sacrifices and gave gifts to Brāhmaṇas; where he worshipped the sacred Tulsī plant and Pipala tree, heard recited the Vedas and the Purāṇas; where all go for pilgrimage; where all sing the Smṛtis and the Purāṇas, there, Mādhava brought the Mlechhas.²

Ready to betray his country for a private wrong, Mādhava goes to Delhi. He approaches Sultan Allā-ud-din with presents and offers to subdue Gujarāta if an army is given to him. The sultan consents, and sends a message to Kānhaḍade, the Cohāṇa king of Jhālora, to let the imperial army pass through his territory on its way to Gujarāta. Proudly, Kānhaḍade replies:

I owe no such duty. They will plunder the villages; take my men prisoners; tear off women’s ears. I do not make way for those who oppress the Brāhmaṇa and the cow.³

But Allā-ud-din, determined to conquer Gujarāta, secures a passage through Mevāḍa. Baṭṭaḍa of Moḍāsa vainly bars the way of the onrushing hosts.

Pillaging, burning, destroying, the Sultan’s army marches towards Pāṭaṇa. The Mussalmans, with Mādhava at their head, invest the city. The ex-minister, traitor to the last, advises Karṇa to escape with his life. The king takes the advice; the queen flees on foot; and the capital falls into the hands of Alafkhan, the general of Allā-ud-din. ‘And

1. गूजरातिनू भोजन करूं, जु तरकाणू आणू अरहूं.
2. जिहां पूजीइ सालिग्राम, जिहां जपीइ हरिनूं नाम,
जिणि देसि कीजइ जाग, जिहां विग्रनइ दीजइ त्याग,
जिहां तुलसी पीपल पूजीइ, वेद पुराण धर्म बूझीइ,
जिणि देसि सहु तीरथ जाइ, स्मृति पुराण मावीइ गाइ
..... माधवि म्लेच्छ आणिआ तहिं.
3. ए तां नहीं अहारु धर्म,
भाजीइ गाम झालीइ बान, अबला तणा त्रोडीइ कान,
जिहां पीडीइ विग्र नइ गाइ, तिहां वाट नवि आपइ राइ.

from what once were temples was sounded the muezzin's call to prayers.'

The army then started on a further campaign of conquest and destruction to the south. It carried carnage right up to Surat, Rander, and the sea; returned to Saurāshtra, destroyed many of its towns, and proceeded to Prabhāsa. The Rajputs mobilised their strength to protect the shrine of Somanātha, and valiantly fought the enemy. But the fortress fell; and in front of the temple which they had vainly sought to protect, the heroic warriors, after ceremonial bathing and anointment, fell fighting, 'surrendered themselves to Somanātha'. Mādhava, the cause of all this evil, was also killed.

The temple had fallen into the hands of the enemy. Alafkhan broke open the shrine, shattered the idol to pieces, and carried away the fragments in a cart to Delhi. "We shall make chunam out of it", he said. The poet then piteously asks Śiva :

O Rudra ! By your wrath you burnt the demons. You spread virtue in the world ; You removed the terror which oppressed the gods ; You put to flight the powerful demon, Tripura, even as the wind blows away chaff. Padmanābha asks you : O Rudra ! Where is now your mighty trident ? ¹

The conquering army, the poet proceeds, burnt villages, devastated the land, plundered people's wealth; took Brāhmaṇas, children and women of all castes captive, and flogged them with thongs of raw hide; carried a moving prison with it, and converted the prisoners into obsequious Turks. Alafkhan then turned his attention to Kānhaḍade, who had declined to give a passage to his army.

Pārvatī and Gaṅgā, God Somanātha's spouses, urge Kānhaḍade in a dream to save the god from the hands of the Mlechha. When Alafkhan sends a message to Kānhaḍade, he gets a fitting reply : "A hero never praises himself. He who performs heroic deeds alone wins fame." Alafkhan thereupon continues his march and encamps at Sirāṇā.

1. आगइ रुद्र ! घणइ कोपनालि दैत्य सवे तिइ बाला ;
तिइ प्रथवी मांहि पुण्य वरतावीऊं, देवलोकि भय टाल्या.
ति बलकाक त्रिपुर विध्वंसिउ पवनवेगि जिम तूल;
पद्मनाभ पूछइ सोमईया ! केथऊं करूं त्रिसूल ?

Ministers of the Cohāṇa king call on the Khan, who shows them his army and his prisoners. The ministers report the state of things to Kāṇhaḍade, who gets ready for battle. The goddess Āśāpura is worshipped; necessary orders are given; and the Rajput armies go forward to meet the foe.

In the battle that follows, the Turks are routed. Alafkhan flees for life. The idol of Somanātha is recovered, and nine lacs of prisoners are set free. The victory is then celebrated in Jhālora, and the conqueror returns home amidst the rejoicings of his people. The fragments of the idol are duly installed in five different towns where they are worshipped. (canto i)

The fleeing Turks came together in a forest; some were without clothes; some, worn out and hungry; others, staggering and wounded; whilst a few were being carried on stretchers. ¹.....

Alafkhan entered Delhi like a thief in the night. When the news of battle spread, consternation prevailed. The women of the Turks began to weep; some tore their clothes to tatters; many smashed the anklets on their feet. Some threw away their precious necklaces; others ripped off their ornaments. Some rent their hair.....One had lost her brother, another a husband, a third her handsome sons.....The markets were closed. ²

Allā-ud-din puts the blame on Alafkhan and is very wroth. He orders another attack on Jhālora. The army thereupon marches back and invests the guardian fort of Sāmiāṇā, which is in the charge of Santalasinha, Kāṇhaḍade's nephew. Kāṇhaḍade goes to his nephew's assistance, and the Mahomedan army is annihilated.

1. जे जे तुरक नासी ऊवल्या, एक ठामि जई जंगलि मिल्या ;
एक उघाडा वख विहीण, भूखई करी एक थाइ खीण.
एक घूमन्ता जाइ घाई, एक डोली ऊपाडया जाइ.
2. अल्लखान अंधारुं करी.....

.....नयर मांहि पइहु एकछ.

भागा तणी वात इम सुणी, ठाम ठाम रोइ तुरकणी.

एक फाडइ पहिरणि सूथणी, पाए नेउर भाजइ घणी.

एक लाखइ एकाडलि हार, एक ऊतारइ सवि सिणगार.

ताणइ वीणि, विछोडइ दोर, एक लस्यु दीसइ बंदोर....

एक तणा बंधव भरतार, एक तणा फूटरा कुमार...

.....नगर मांहि देवराणां हाट.

Allā-ud-din becomes furious. He sends for his generals and the viceroy of Pātāṇa, collects his army, and himself takes the field. The progress of the army, more like a town in motion, is then described. The army lays siege to Sāmi-āṇa, but the fortress is impregnable, and it remains so even at the end of seven long years. The Rajputs, in the well-provisioned fort, continue to defy the enemy. Allā-ud-din then decides upon a sinister stratagem. Cows are killed, and their flesh, tied up in sacks, is thrown by catapults over the fortress walls into the lake within. The following morning, the Rajputs find their only source of water defiled by the flesh of the sacred cow, and decide upon jamahara, a rite commonly known as jauhara.

There was no hope of life. None would touch a drop of the water. The queen said, "We will now perform jamahara." And she addressed a message to the queen of Kāṇhaḍade: "Of what has overtaken us, you will come to know to-morrow. Remember us with affection. In this life, these are our last salutations." Having thus spoken, the queen put on all her ornaments. The retainers brought heaps of sandal-wood. Strong and heroic, the queen entered the fire. All said "Rāma, Rāma", and the friends wept.¹

The Pādshah comes to know of the queen's self-immolation, and offers to treat the beleaguered city with every consideration if Santala only submits. The heroic king replies, "I am ready to give up life, not my honour". The non-combatants in the fort are then asked to leave it, and all the warriors decide on an attack. They worship the Śāligrāma (Vishṇu), and then pray to Rāma. They take their bath, dry their hair, put on Tulsi garlands round their necks. Animated with one desire, they rush on the

-
1. जीवितव्यनी आशा टली, ए पाणी नहीं पीजइ पली.
 राणी बोल इसिउ ऊचरिउ, 'इम जाणेजो जमहर करिउ.'
 कान्हडदेनी घरणि हती, तेह भणी लखी वीनती.
 इस्यूं कहीऊ: 'अह्म वीतूं जेउ, हवइ वीचिसि कालि तुह्म तेउ;
 अह्मस्यूं प्रीति आणेज्यो घणी. आणी जमारइ मोकलामणी.'
 इस्यूं कही नवि लाइ वार, राणी सवि करिउ शिणगार.
 चंदन काठ आणीउ घणु तिहां परिवार मिल्यु तेह तणु.
 साहस प्रभावि एतली आहि, राणी पइठी पावक मांहि
 राम राम वाणी उच्चरइ. सजन लोकनि आंसू खिरइ.

Mussalmans. A great battle ensues ; and the Hindus, fighting valiantly, are killed to a man. (Canto ii)

This unflinching and terrible self-immolation in order to safeguard their honour was the marvellous feature of Hindu warfare during those dire times. There is not a fort in Rajputānā which cannot boast of the proud heroism of women who wooed fire to save their honour, and of men who marched to death to preserve their freedom.

VI

Allā-ud-din captures Sāmiāṇa, and calls upon Kānhaḍade to surrender. But he is again met with a proud refusal. The Pādshāh continues his march, and, on the way, pillages and burns the venerable city of Bhīnnamāla, even then a centre of learning. Some skirmishes follow with varying success. The Mussalman army camps near Jhālora. Allā-ud-din's daughter, Pirojā, who has fallen in love with Vīramadeva, the son of Kānhaḍade, insists on an offer of marriage being sent to the latter. With lofty pride, the Rajput prince spurns the offer.

The Cohāṇa's race is spotless, like the full moon. Descended as I am from the sun, shall I disgrace the founder of my race? . . . Shall I become a convert? This has never happened before, and shall not happen now.¹

The insulted Pādshah then proceeds to invest Jhālora. He finds it in a merry mood, for, he hears bands playing within her walls, and sees festive banners floating on her towers. The Rajputs, at intervals, sally from the fort and harass the besiegers, and the Sultan has eventually to withdraw towards Delhi. Kānhaḍade, thirsting for fight, comes out of Jhālora, and his armies press the retreating Mussalman army hard.

The princess, having acquired occult knowledge, finds that Vīrama was her husband in previous lives. She tells her father of her relationship with Vīrama, and prophesies

-
1. चहुआणनूं कुल निकलंक, जिसिउ पूनम तणु मयंक
सूर्य तणइ वंशि हु आज, बडा पुरुषनि आवइ लाज.
हुं तां नही बटालूं आप.....
.....इसी बात नवि सुणी पूराणि
.....आगिइ हूई न, होसि नहीं.

bow to a block of stone. Even if the flame of the submarine fire is extinguished, I will not yield an inch of land to the Mlechha.¹

A battle ensues between the two armies, and is described in jingling rhymes. The Mussalmans are routed, and in token of submission the not unusual humiliation of being made to eat grass is forced on them. Raṇamalla begins to think of world-wide conquest, and he says, "I will bring under my control everything on which the sun shines."²

II

Kaṇhaḍadeprabandha (c. 1456) follows a greater literary tradition. It deals with the struggle which Gujarāta made for self-preservation after 1297, and breathes the grim and heroic attitude of mind which prevailed among her people during the fourteenth century. The author, Padmanābha of Viśalanagara, was the poet-laureate of Akherāja, the Cahamāna or Cohāṇa king of Jhālora and a descendant of the hero of the poem. A few manuscripts of the work, luckily mistaken for those of a religious work, were preserved by the Jaina temples. Its language is Old Gujarātī, then spoken all over Western Rājasthāna including Gujarāta. The style, though not as elegant as Bhālaṇā's, maintains a high level of expressiveness. The language is neither trite nor ornate; the interest is well sustained throughout. The author, however, could not resist the temptation of recording in the conventional manner the names of Rajput and Mussalman warriors, and of introducing didactic verses and tedious narrative of past lives. In some places, the chronological order has not been preserved, and the same descriptions appear more than once. As a narrative, it is much better than many other rāsas; and it has the merit of being without religious bias.

III

The poem opens with a prayer, and proceeds to mention Māravāḍa, 'the land of nine forts', and the Sonagirā Cohāṇas

-
1. मुझ सिरकमल मेच्छपय लगइ, तु गयणङ्गमणि भाण व उगइ.
जां अम्बरपुडतलि तरणि रमइ, तां कमधजकन्ध न धगड नमइ.
वरि वडवानल तण झाल शमइ; पुण मेच्छ न आपूं चास किमइ.
 2. ईडरवइ रा रणमल्ल कहि, 'इक्खत्त रवितलि करुं,'

‘as noble looking as royal swans’. Karnaḍeva Ghelo ruled in Gujarāta. Being enamoured of Keśava’s wife, he killed the husband and appropriated the wife. The minister Mādhava, Keśava’s brother, moved by wrath, said, “I shall not taste any food in Gujarāta till I bring the Turks here.”¹ On this, the poet feelingly laments :

To the place where he worshipped his God and sang His praises; where he performed sacrifices and gave gifts to Brāhmaṇas; where he worshipped the sacred Tulsi plant and Pipala tree, heard recited the Vedas and the Purāṇas; where all go for pilgrimage; where all sing the Smṛtis and the Purāṇas, there, Mādhava brought the Mlechhas.²

Ready to betray his country for a private wrong, Mādhava goes to Delhi. He approaches Sultan Allā-ud-din with presents and offers to subdue Gujarāta if an army is given to him. The sultan consents, and sends a message to Kānhaḍade, the Cohāṇa king of Jhālora, to let the imperial army pass through his territory on its way to Gujarāta. Proudly, Kānhaḍade replies:

I owe no such duty. They will plunder the villages; take my men prisoners; tear off women’s ears. I do not make way for those who oppress the Brāhmaṇa and the cow.³

But Allā-ud-din, determined to conquer Gujarāta, secures a passage through Mevāḍa. Baṭṭaḍa of Moḍāsa vainly bars the way of the onrushing hosts.

Pillaging, burning, destroying, the Sultan’s army marches towards Pāṭaṇa. The Mussalmans, with Mādhava at their head, invest the city. The ex-minister, traitor to the last, advises Karna to escape with his life. The king takes the advice; the queen flees on foot; and the capital falls into the hands of Alafkhan, the general of Allā-ud-din. ‘And

-
1. गूजरातिनूं भोजन करूं, जु तरकाणूं आणूं अरहूं.
 2. जिहां पूजीइ सालिग्राम, जिहां जपीइ हरिनूं नाम,
जिणि देसि कीजइ जाग, जिहां विप्रनइ दीजइ त्याग,
जिहां तुलसी पीपल पूजीइ, वेद पुराण धर्म बूझीइ,
जिणि देसि सहू तीरथ जाइ, स्मृति पुराण मावीइ गाइ
..... माघवि म्लेच्छ आणिआ तहिं.
 3. ए तां नहीं अह्वार धर्म,
भाजीइ गाम झालीइ बान, अबला तणा त्रोडीइ कान,
जिहां पीडीइ विप्र नइ गाइ, तिहां वाट नवि आपइ राइ.

from what once were temples was sounded the muezzin's call to prayers.'

The army then started on a further campaign of conquest and destruction to the south. It carried carnage right up to Surat, Rander, and the sea ; returned to Saurāshtra, destroyed many of its towns, and proceeded to Prabhāsa. The Rajputs mobilised their strength to protect the shrine of Somanātha, and valiantly fought the enemy. But the fortress fell ; and in front of the temple which they had vainly sought to protect, the heroic warriors, after ceremonial bathing and anointment, fell fighting, 'surrendered themselves to Somanātha'. Mādhava, the cause of all this evil, was also killed.

The temple had fallen into the hands of the enemy. Alafkhan broke open the shrine, shattered the idol to pieces, and carried away the fragments in a cart to Delhi. "We shall make chunam out of it", he said. The poet then piteously asks Śiva :

O Rudra ! By your wrath you burnt the demons. You spread virtue in the world ; You removed the terror which oppressed the gods ; You put to flight the powerful demon, Tripura, even as the wind blows away chaff. Padmanābha asks you : O Rudra ! Where is now your mighty trident ? ¹

The conquering army, the poet proceeds, burnt villages, devastated the land, plundered people's wealth ; took Brāhmaṇas, children and women of all castes captive, and flogged them with thongs of raw hide ; carried a moving prison with it, and converted the prisoners into obsequious Turks. Alafkhan then turned his attention to Kānhaḍade, who had declined to give a passage to his army.

Pārvatī and Gaṅgā, God Somanātha's spouses, urge Kānhaḍade in a dream to save the god from the hands of the Mlechha. When Alafkhan sends a message to Kānhaḍade, he gets a fitting reply : "A hero never praises himself. He who performs heroic deeds alone wins fame." Alafkhan thereupon continues his march and encamps at Sirāṇā.

1. आगइ रुद्र ! घणइ कोपानलि दैत्य सवे तिइं बाला ;
तिइं प्रथवी मांहि पुण्य वरतावीऊं, देवलोकि भय टाल्या.
तिं बलकाक त्रिपुर विध्वंसिउ पवनवेगि जिम तूल ;
पद्मनाभ पूछइ सोमईया ! केथऊं करुं त्रिसूल ?

Ministers of the Cohāṇa king call on the Khan, who shows them his army and his prisoners. The ministers report the state of things to Kāṇhaḍade, who gets ready for battle. The goddess Āśāpura is worshipped; necessary orders are given; and the Rajput armies go forward to meet the foe.

In the battle that follows, the Turks are routed. Alafkhan flees for life. The idol of Somanātha is recovered, and nine lacs of prisoners are set free. The victory is then celebrated in Jhālora, and the conqueror returns home amidst the rejoicings of his people. The fragments of the idol are duly installed in five different towns where they are worshipped. (canto i)

The fleeing Turks came together in a forest; some were without clothes; some, worn out and hungry; others, staggering and wounded; whilst a few were being carried on stretchers. ¹.....

Alafkhan entered Delhi like a thief in the night. When the news of battle spread, consternation prevailed. The women of the Turks began to weep; some tore their clothes to tatters; many smashed the anklets on their feet. Some threw away their precious necklaces; others ripped off their ornaments. Some rent their hair.....One had lost her brother, another a husband, a third her handsome sons.....The markets were closed. ²

Allā-ud-din puts the blame on Alafkhan and is very wroth. He orders another attack on Jhālora. The army thereupon marches back and invests the guardian fort of Sāmiāṇā, which is in the charge of Santalasiṇha, Kāṇhaḍade's nephew. Kāṇhaḍade goes to his nephew's assistance, and the Mahomedan army is annihilated.

1. जे जे तुरक नासी ऊवल्या, एक ठामि जई जंगलि मिल्या ;
एक उघाडा वल्ल विहीण, भूखई करी एक थाई खीण.
एक घूमन्ता जाई घाई, एक डोली ऊपाडया जाई.
2. अल्लखान अंधारूं करी.....
.....नयर मांहि पइठु एकलु.
भागा तणी वात इम सुणी, ठाम ठाम रोइ तुरकणी.
एक फाडइ पहिरणि सूयणी, पाए नेउर भाजइ घणी.
एक लाखइ एकाउलि हार, एक ऊतारइ सवि सिणगार,
ताणइ बीणि, विछोडइ दोर, एक ल्हस्या दीसइ बंदोर....
एक तणा बंधव भरतार, एक तणा फूटरा कुमार...
.....नगर मांहि देवराणां हाट.

Allā-ud-din becomes furious. He sends for his generals and the viceroy of Pātāṇa, collects his army, and himself takes the field. The progress of the army, more like a town in motion, is then described. The army lays siege to Sāmi-āṇa, but the fortress is impregnable, and it remains so even at the end of seven long years. The Rajputs, in the well-provisioned fort, continue to defy the enemy. Allā-ud-din then decides upon a sinister stratagem. Cows are killed, and their flesh, tied up in sacks, is thrown by catapults over the fortress walls into the lake within. The following morning, the Rajputs find their only source of water defiled by the flesh of the sacred cow, and decide upon jamahara, a rite commonly known as jauhara.

There was no hope of life. None would touch a drop of the water. The queen said, "We will now perform jamahara." And she addressed a message to the queen of Kāṇhaḍāde: "Of what has overtaken us, you will come to know to-morrow. Remember us with affection. In this life, these are our last salutations." Having thus spoken, the queen put on all her ornaments. The retainers brought heaps of sandal-wood. Strong and heroic, the queen entered the fire. All said "Rāma, Rāma", and the friends wept.¹

The Pādshah comes to know of the queen's self-immolation, and offers to treat the beleaguered city with every consideration if Santala only submits. The heroic king replies, "I am ready to give up life, not my honour". The non-combatants in the fort are then asked to leave it, and all the warriors decide on an attack. They worship the Śāligrāma (Vishṇu), and then pray to Rāma. They take their bath, dry their hair, put on Tulsi garlands round their necks. Animated with one desire, they rush on the

-
1. जीवितव्यनी आशा टली, ए पाणी नहीं पीजइ पली.

राणी बोल इसिउ ऊचरिउ, 'इम जाणेजो जमहर करिउ.'

कान्हडदेनी घरणि हती, तेह भणी लखी वीनती.

इस्युं कहीऊ: 'अह्य वीतुं जेउ, हवइ वीचिसि कालि तुझ तेउ;

अह्यस्युं प्रीति आणेज्यो घणी. आणी जमारइ मोकलामणी.'

इस्युं कही नवि लाइ वार, राणी सवि करिउ शिणगर.

चंदन काठ आणीउ घणु तिहां परिवार मिल्यु तेह तणु.

साहस प्रभावि एतली आहि, राणी पइठी पावक मांछि

राम राम वाणी उच्चरइ. सजन लोकनि आंसू खिरइ.

Mussalmans. A great battle ensues ; and the Hindus, fighting valiantly, are killed to a man. (Canto ii)

This unflinching and terrible self-immolation in order to safeguard their honour was the marvellous feature of Hindu warfare during those dire times. There is not a fort in Rajputānā which cannot boast of the proud heroism of women who wooed fire to save their honour, and of men who marched to death to preserve their freedom.

VI

Allā-ud-din captures Sāmiāṇa, and calls upon Kānhaḍade to surrender. But he is again met with a proud refusal. The Pādshāh continues his march, and, on the way, pillages and burns the venerable city of Bhīnnamāla, even then a centre of learning. Some skirmishes follow with varying success. The Mussalman army camps near Jhālora. Allā-ud-din's daughter, Pirojā, who has fallen in love with Vīramadeva, the son of Kānhaḍade, insists on an offer of marriage being sent to the latter. With lofty pride, the Rajput prince spurns the offer.

The Cohāṇa's race is spotless, like the full moon. Descended as I am from the sun, shall I disgrace the founder of my race? . . . Shall I become a convert? This has never happened before, and shall not happen now.¹

The insulted Pādshah then proceeds to invest Jhālora. He finds it in a merry mood, for, he hears bands playing within her walls, and sees festive banners floating on her towers. The Rajputs, at intervals, sally from the fort and harass the besiegers, and the Sultan has eventually to withdraw towards Delhi. Kānhaḍade, thirsting for fight, comes out of Jhālora, and his armies press the retreating Mussalman army hard.

The princess, having acquired occult knowledge, finds that Vīrama was her husband in previous lives. She tells her father of her relationship with Vīrama, and prophesies

-
1. चहुआणनू कुल निकलंक, जिसिउ पूनम तणु मयंक
सूर्य तणइ वंशि हु आज, वडा पुरुषनि आवइ लाज.
हुं तां नही बटाछं आप.....
.....इसी बात नवि सुणी पूराणि
.....आगिइ हूई न, होसि नहीं.

the death of her lover, of Kānhaḍade, of her father and of herself. This part is introduced evidently after the usual orthodox style of kathās from Tarangalola downwards, but in the mouth of the daughter of Allā-ud-din, it mars the realistic charm of the poem.

Anxious to see Viramadeva and to obtain the freedom of her sister and brother-in-law, then prisoners in Jhālora, the princess, goes to the city with a small retinue. She encamps on the bank of a lake, and is met by the chivalrous Kānhaḍade and his son Virāma. The princess begs for love, but in vain.

Love has made me miserable. What can I, an unfortunate woman, say? Love! I, a foreigner, beg of you; find out for yourself what you are to me. My days and nights seem endless; the pain of separation oppresses me; I cannot live without you, my love. A fish cannot live without water; no more can a woman without her lord.¹

Virāma is unrelenting. The princess, anxious for peace, requests that the Mussalman army should not be attacked at night, and that her sister should be released. The chivalrous Rajputs readily grant these requests. Virāma, in return, demands that the Sultan should not destroy temples, pillage the land, or trouble Brāhmaṇas and slaughter cows. On behalf of her father, she agrees to respect his wishes. At her desire, she is taken to see Jhālora and has a view of the impregnable citadel. Kānhaḍade releases the prisoners and returns the captured elephants. Loaded with presents, the princess returns to her father, and the Sultan withdraws to Delhi. (canto iii).

VII

The princess tells her father of the glories of Jhālora, its learned men, its warriors, its markets, its pleasures, its ramparts, and its prosperity. The Pādshah does not like the engagement into which his daughter has entered, but

-
1. कइ मई मन्मथ दुहविजं जी, कइ हूं निरुण नारि
पीयु परदेसणी वीनवइ जी, आपि आप संभारि.
दिवस दोहिला हूं नीगसुं जी, रयणि घणेरी थाइ.
विरह वेदना माहरी जी, पीयु विण रहणूं न जाइ.
जु जलहीणी माछली जी, जीवइ नही जग मांदि;
कंत विद्वणी कामिनि जी, तिम तिम खीणी थाइ.

agrees to wait for the period of eight years, at the end of which, according to her prophesy, Jhālora is to fall. Later, he gives orders to his army to proceed towards Jhālora. The princess sends her nurse with the army to bring Vīrama to her, or, in the event of his death, to bring her his head. The army is repulsed by the Jhālora forces led by Vīrama. But the Sultan is adamant: Jhālora must be captured at any cost.

For over twelve years the beleaguered city defies the Mussalmans. Its merchants feed the people; miracles save it from disasters. At last a palanquin-bearer turns traitor, and discloses a secret way leading to the fort. The bearer's wife, furious at her husband's treachery, kills him, and informs Kānhaḍade of the unexpected entry of the besieging army. Desperate combat ensues. Kānhaḍade's brother works wonders against heavy odds; but the outnumbered Rajputs are faced with the alternative of death or dishonour. Kānhaḍade sends for the priest and, presenting him with his own horse, begs him to flee from the fort. The Brāhmaṇa is not to be outdone; he accepts the king's horses as gifts, but returns them to the royal stables. The king is surprised and asks the priest why he, a man of peace, does not leave the fort.

Who will carry your funeral bier, my king? If I live after you die, then, I live in dishonour. If Jhālora falls, I too will die.¹ . . .

The solemn rite then begins. The queens prepare for the jamahara; the priest gives his benedictions to Kānhaḍade; the subjects now bow before him, and decide to join him in the immolation. The king calls his son Vīrama and anoints him king. Vīrama bows to his mother, who blesses him. The sandal and other sacred wood is brought. All the queens, having bathed, commend themselves to the Sun. They enter the fire; precisely 1,984 of their sex follow; gods witness the sacrifice.

Kānhaḍade and his men, sword in hand, then rush on the besiegers. 'The Rajputs re-enact the Ramāyaṇa.' Hundreds fall fighting. The city falls into the hands of the enemy; and Kānhaḍade, at bay, withdraws to the citadel. His priest advises him to crown his heroism by falling in

1. व्यास भणइ, 'कुण बीजउ राजा पालखी खांधि लेसइ ?'

जु तह्य पूठि हुं जीवूं तु अपकीरति घण पामूं,
जाल्होरि मेलतइ नार्थि देइ आपणू होमूं.'

battle and the Cohāṇa hero acts accordingly. Vīrama reigns for three days and a half. His queens also prepare for jamhara. Their companions looking on, the beautiful queens come to the balconies, and with restrained tears worship their beloved Jhālora fort. "And verily shall we share Vīrama's beautiful throne on the Sonagiri Mount," they said, and entered the fire.

To ensure death, Vīrama thrusts a dagger in his bowels, straps up the wound, rushes into the fight, and, dealing death all round him, is himself slain. The Mussalman general, who has not lost sight of the princess's wishes, tries to take him captive. But the hero, invincible in death as in life, escapes him.

The nurse brings Vīrama's head to Delhi on a bier, and placing it on a gold salver, brings it to the heart-broken princess. As she gazes at the face of her beloved, the head turns away from her: the invincible Cohāṇa hero even in death keeps his vow. Whereupon the princess laments thus:

My virtuous, handsome hero! Why are you so wroth? I am love-struck, my Sonagiri Cohāṇa. I am but your wife, with one life only separating us. Why do you forget our love? My heart is broken. Will you not hear me? You are gone to paradise; I will come with you.¹

Having worshipped her beloved's head, she jumps into the Jumnā to meet in the next world him whom she had missed this. (canto iv)

VIII

Except where necessity for the conventional features of the rāsa takes him out of his normal vein, the author is realistic. He is perhaps the only one of the many writers of the period who has handled characters and events so well and truly. The narrative is, on the whole, well sus-

¹ सगुण सद्धणा राउल ! माणि रुसणु किंसु ?

हुं तां प्रेमगहेलडी तुं सोनगिरु चहूआणजी.

तुं तां प्राणद माहरु, हुं तां ताहरी घरि नारि जी;

जनम एक अंतरि गयुं सो नेहल्ल म वीसारी जी.

हईयलहुं घणु गहवडयुं, तुं सुणि न अझारा नाथ जी !

तुं अमरापुरि सांचरिउ, हुं मरणि न मेहल्लं साथजी, tained. The Rajput and the Mussalman warriors are true to life, the former headstrong, firm, unflinching in matters where honour was concerned, neglectful of prudence, fanatically heroic; the latter, deceitful, determined, relentlessly cruel and determined on victory at any cost. Only Pirojā, the daughter of the Sultan, is out of harmony with the setting. The characters do not lack individuality, as do most of those found in the literature of the age. The irate Sultan is not badly done. Kānhaḍade, generous, charitable, beloved of his people, superstitious, is well depicted. In him is revealed the real Rajput. His son, though he occupies little space, is also well drawn, and so is the old Brāhmaṇa priest. Mādhava, the 'direful spring of woes unnumbered', is also well drawn. The poet portrays the actual situation in the India of the day: Hindu princes, strong and heroic, one jealous of the other, fighting in isolated splendour; the Mussalmans, stern and relentless, advancing and campaigning as a collective body. This prabandha is a rhapsody unique in Old, or Modern Gujarātī, throbbing with great and sustained heroism; an epic of a great age fast fading into oblivion; a swan-song of the Gujarāta of Siddharāja.

CHAPTER III.

A NEW GUJARĀTA AND THE PURĀNIC MOVEMENT.

(1400 to 1600)

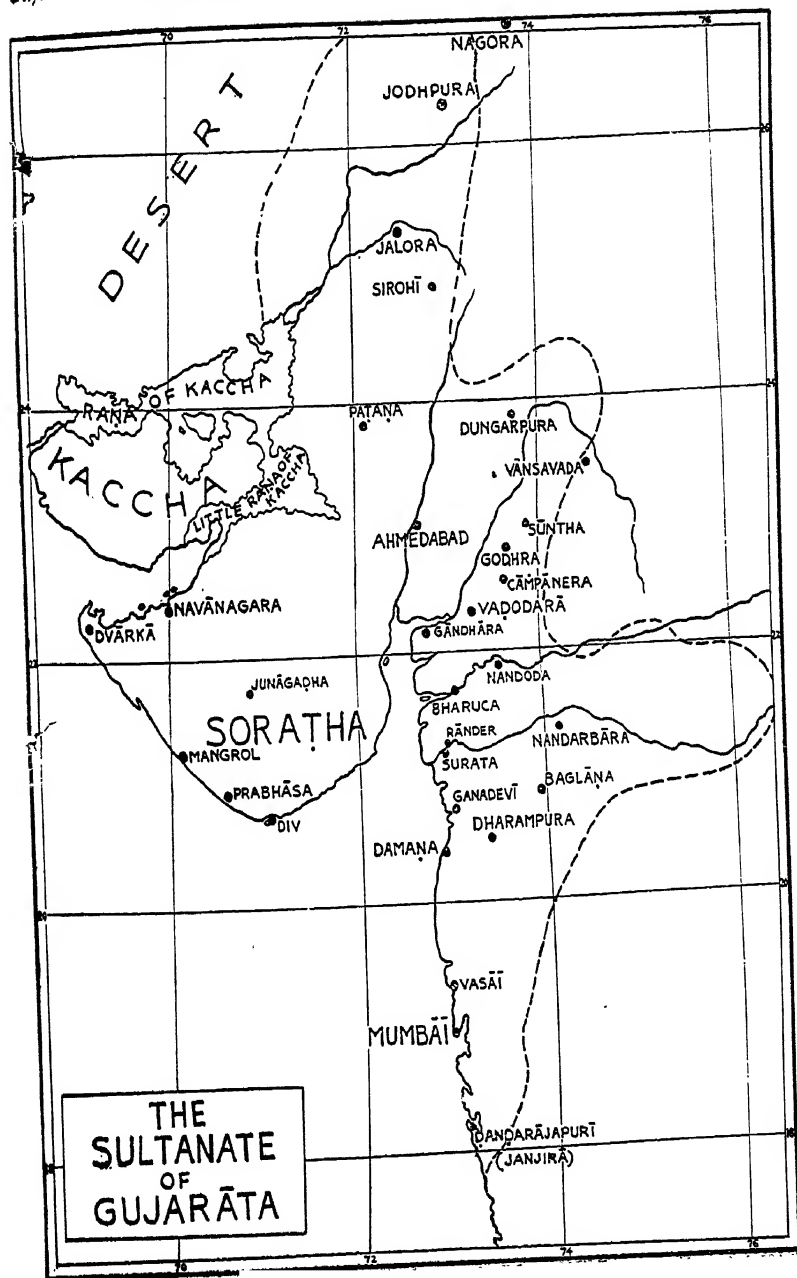

The Sultanate of Ahmedābād—Akbar—Marāṭhā raids—The Purānic influence—The new spirit among Brāhmanas—Impetus to the deśabhāṣā—Rāmānanda—The purāṇika—The Gāgariā bhaṭa—The akhyāna literature—Bhālaṇa (c. 1426-1500)—The ākhyānā in his hands—Kūlaṃbarī—Daśama-skandha—Mantri Karmaṇa (1470)—Bhīma (c. 1473)—Nākara (c. 1550).

Political history from 1411 to 1707 had a negative influence on the literature of Gujarāta. From 1411 to 1573 the country was ruled by the Sultans of Ahmedabad; from 1573 to 1707 it was a province of the Moghul Empire. These facts circumscribed life, and brought into existence new literary traditions which not only ignored political conditions, but provided an easy way to forget them.

I

In 1411 Ahmad Shah, the grandson of Muzafar Shah, transferred the capital of his kingdom from Pāṭaṇa to Ahmedābād. He was a fanatic, and his acts did not belie his bigotry. He invaded Sorāṭha, Mālvā and Koṅkaṇa, but tried to conciliate the Hindu landlords by giving them a fourth share of the villages. His grandson, Mahmūd Begdā, (1459-1513) was powerful both on land and sea, and consolidated the kingdom by annexing Junāgaḍha. He built many of the monuments which have made Ahmedābād famous. The Mussalman historians narrate numerous anecdotes revealing his popularity with his people. To the Hindus, however, one sultan was as good, or as bad, as another.

The next great Sultan was Begdā's grandson, Bahādur Shah (1527-1536), a great warrior who adopted an aggressive policy of conquest. Gujarāta soon came to be divided into twenty five sarkārs: Ahmedābād, Sūntha, Godhrā, Cāmpānera, Vaḍodarā, Bharuca, Nāndoda, and Surat in the centre; Sirohī, Jhālora, Jodhapura and Nāgora in the north; Dungarpura, Vānsavāḍā, Nāṇdarbāra, Bāglāṇa, and Dharampura in the east; Dandārājapurī, (modern Janjirā).

Mumbāi, (Bombay) Vasāi (Bassein), and Damaṇa in the south; Sorāṭha, Navānagara, and Kaccha in the west. A territory slightly larger than what is linguistically the Gujarāta of to-day was a political unit under Bāhādur Shah. His ambitious raids drew the wrath of Humāyun, the Mogul Emperor, who overran Gujarāta in 1535. Bāhādur soon recovered it, but he died the next year. Reckless as a ruler, he laid a heavy burden of military expenditure on the people and left them to the tender mercies of his revenue farmers.

In 1573 Akbar annexed Gujarāta.

From 1411 to 1573, Gujarāta remained a political unit. The Khans and Amirs swept across the country; made friends with Hindu chiefs and leaders as suited their immediate purpose; spread terror and destruction for a time; and were worsted by their rivals, or, sank into imbecility. During this period, the people enjoyed settled existence only when sheltered behind their castes, mahājanas and pancāyats. Social exclusiveness became the rule of the day, and life acquired an unprogressive and narrow outlook, mainly religious and other-worldly. And so it continued till the British came.

I

Of all the cultural and educational influences forged during the Gupta times, the Purāṇas were the most powerful. The Mahābhārata, including the Harivaṃśa, a complete cyclopaedia of Āryan culture, had attained the sanctity of a fifth Veda under the name of Śatsāhasrisamhitā. The Vāyu, the Matsya, the Mārkaṇḍeya, the Brahmāṇḍa, and, perhaps, the Devībhāgavata Purāṇas had become very popular by the seventh century. The Vishṇu (c. 600), the Purāṇa of the Bhāgavata dharma which the Imperial Guptas followed, exercised great influence over the minds of men. Other Purāṇas also came to be composed, till their traditional number stood at eighteen.

Literary men, for centuries, sought inspiration for subject and atmosphere from one or more of these Purāṇas. The tradition of mythic kings; the mythology connected with sacred places all over the country; stories and hymns glorifying gods and goddesses; and the ethics and the ritual—all this Purāṇic wealth had brought uniformity of belief, conduct and outlook to all who looked upon Bharatakhanda as their land, and Dharma as the law in this life and the means of salvation for the next. It had created in the people a living sense of homogeneity, and of the continuity of Āryan life. When the Mussalmans overran the country, the Purāṇas became, in the hands of the Brāhmaṇas, formidable instruments to preserve religion and culture. The Purāṇic scheme of things had universal application. A Hindu king had a place ready in the genealogy of the Sun or the Moon. A recently elevated Brāhmaṇa had a position ready in the family of a venerable Ṛshi of Vedic antiquity. And the people had all the materials ready to bring up fresh generations in the traditions of Āryan life, to preserve the integrity of society, and to resist the proselytising vigour of the foreigner.

And when the Brāhmaṇas found the fanatical foreigner—mleccha as they called him—devastating their land, demolishing the most sacred shrines of their faith, destroying their dharma and the social structure which they believed to be eternal, they developed miraculous adaptability. They delivered to the masses, through the medium of their dialects, the message of the Purāṇas, and made the past live again. The Purāṇic revival preserved society and culture, and directed literary energy into the channel of the deśabhāshā. It spread over the whole country, and opened up prospects for all. Poets received fresh inspiration; purāṇikas, a new vocation; philosophers, a new orientation. To the village saints, it gave something to live for; and it brought to the ordinary people, in the place of cumbrous ritual and abstruse doctrine, bhakti, a worship full of joy and song, dance and prayer. Every province began to work out its cultural salvation. Every language began to develop, and its literature assumed distinctive character.

II

About the beginning of the fourteenth century, one of the greatest of Indian reformers lent an active hand in spreading the different influences then at work. His life is shrouded in tradition; his creed is found only in the devotional songs composed by his disciples. Rāmānanda, originally a follower of Rāmānuja, began his apostolic work in North India. He was an uncompromising advocate of purity of heart, and spread the worship of Rāma, the high-souled hero of the Rāmāyaṇa and the seventh avatāra of Viṣṇu. He protested against social and religious evils. The Vedas, Brāhmaṇas, rituals, inequalities of caste, the grossness of idolatry, and even Saṁskṛta came in for his iconoclastic zeal. He stood for God, humility, and equality of men.

His teachings proved very popular among the lower classes of Hindus and Mussalmans. His principal disciples included Kabīra, a spinner, Raidāsa, a tanner, Senā, a barber, Sadnā, a butcher, and Naraharidāsa, a Brāhmaṇa. Kabīra, a Hindu brought up by a Musalman, was catholic in an age of orthodoxy; and his padas, songs, appealed equally to both communities. He created a great impression in Gujarāta and the Kabīrpantha gave rise to sects which claimed numerous adherents. Guru Nānaka (1469-1555), the founder of Sikhism, was a disciple of Raidāsa; and the Grantha Sāheb, the sacred book of the sect, contains the only available padas of Rāmānanda and Raidāsa. Naraharidāsa was the guru of Tulsidāsa (1532-1623), the greatest of saint-poets of the age. The latter's Rāmācaritamānasa, if judged by the number of men it has inspired, can be classed among the first few books in the literature of the world.

Rāmānanda and his disciples wielded a great liberalising influence over their age. Even the orthodox Brāhmaṇa was shaken out of his religious groove, and could not but admire their tenets and revere the idealism for which the deity, Rāma, stood. They threw their weight against Saṁskṛta, and were the first unflinching champions of the language of the people. Kabīra's attack on the lovers of Saṁskṛta runs thus:

Pañḍitas talk in Saṁskṛta alone and dubb those who use the bhāṣhā ignorant fools. In the world, pañḍitas praise only Saṁskṛta. But bhakti through the bhāṣhā alone gives strength and leads to salvation. Saṁskṛta is the water of wells; bhāshā is running brook. Bhāshā is loved by the true guru and shows the true way.¹

Rāmānanda's influence in Gujarāta was widespread in the latter half of the fourteenth, and the fifteenth, century. It taught the learned not to spurn the lowly and the illiterate, but to work with and for them through the medium of their own language.

III

In the beginning of the fourteenth century, we first come across definite literary landmarks of the Purāṇic movement in Gujarāta. The Bhāgavata, Jayadeva's Gītagovinda and Bopadeva's Harilīlāmṛta, works principally dealing with the amours of Kṛṣṇa, had perceptibly altered the tone and language of the folk-songs relating to Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa. In 1416 Nṛsiṅhāranyamuni composed Vishṇubhakticāndrodaya, a work on bhakti. In 1417 an inscription on Mount Giranāra begins with a prayer to Damodara, 'the stealer of butter', referring to Śrī Kṛṣṇa's well-known pranks as a cowherd. In 1499 Vāghelā Mokalasinha is recorded to have protected the members of the Bhāgavata sect.

Paṇḍitas were rare, and the knowledge of Samskr̥ta was restricted to a select class. Among the intellectual and well-to-do classes, there was naturally a craving for literature, and, from the beginning of the fifteenth century, poets worked through the medium of Old Gujarātī to satisfy it. But their language has been transformed out of recognition. Manuscripts of some of their works, recovered so far, have been written years after the author's death. In many cases, the works were handed down from generation to generation by professional reciters of the Purāṇas, or purāṇikas; and every reciter went on making such changes in their form, language and substance as

1. संस्कृतहिं पंडित कहै, बहुत करै अभिमान,
भाषा जानि तरक करै, ते नर मूढ अजान.
संस्क्रित संसार में, पंडित करै बखान,
भाषा भक्ति दबावही, न्यारा पद निरवान.
संस्क्रित है कूपजल, भाषा बहुता नीर,
भाषा सतगुरु सहित है, सतमत गहिर गँभीर,

the occasion and the taste of his audience required. The gāgariā bhāṭa, who preserved most of these works in the form of ākhyānas, was the greatest sinner in this respect.

The gāgariā bhāṭa, or māṇa bhāṭa, is peculiar to Gujarāta, and has played a great part in the evolution and preservation of this class of literature. He is the popular counterpart of the purāṇika, who, generally well-read in Saṁskṛta, recites the Purāṇas from the original to a select audience at his own house, or at the house of his patron. The purāṇika, more often than not, maintains the dignity of learning, and enjoys the position of a friend in his patron's family. But the gāgariā bhāṭa is rarely acquainted with Saṁskṛta; he knows only the ākhyānas, or the Purāṇic episodes in Gujarāṭi verse which he has learnt from his teacher during his apprenticeship. He goes from place to place with a couple of disciples. His stock-in-trade is his ākhyānas, his tact, and his māṇa or gāgara, a large copper pot with a narrow neck from which he gets his name.

Wherever he happens to be, he opens his session at night on some temple-door or verandah before a public square. With his nimble fingers loaded with brass rings, he starts playing upon the gāgara as on a hand-drum, and makes the pot resound with his skilful raps. The neighbourhood flocks to hear the kathā, as the Purāṇic recital is called; the public square in front and the windows of the surrounding houses are turned into an auditorium for the occasion. The bhāṭa recites an ākhyāna; explains many parts of it; adds a flourish here, a touch there, to move or tickle the audience; improvises new stories and introduces lively anecdotes. The audience sits, hour after hour, absorbed in the recital. The description of a Purāṇic incident or character, in the mouth of a competent bhāṭa, assumes a fresh form and contemporary colour. At an interesting point in the recital the bhāṭa stops, and wants to know who among his listeners will provide his next day's dinner; and, unless he is ignorant of the rudiments of his art, he is sure to receive invitations from more than one hospitable townsman. Having made sure of the morrow, he proceeds with the kathā till after midnight, sometimes till the early hours of the morning. The session continues for a month, sometimes, longer ; its length, as a rule, depends upon the bhaṭa's ability to attract a good audience, and upon the hospitable nature of the locality. After the session is over, the bhaṭa is feasted, carried in a procession through the town, and presented with a purse as a send-off.

The bhaṭas flourished in Gujarāta for more than five hundred years, but have fallen on evil days with the advent of the press, the theatre, and the cinema. They provided free entertainment and education, religious and secular, and helped to preserve Purāṇic literature. But these poets were scarcely qualified to reproduce the spirit, the art, or the idealism of the original Purāṇas ; and were mostly content with mechanical repetition of narrative verses handed down from teacher to disciple. Their range of emotion, sentiment and thought was limited ; their language, suited to an illiterate audience, lacked refinement and expressiveness. Sometimes, only a Bhālaṇa or a Premānanda could break the monotony by a word-picture of contemporary life, or by a charming song full of homely sentiments.

But the service which the gāgariā bhaṭa rendered to culture was immense.

He considered himself the heir of ancient Āryan culture ; of a civilization, pure and incomparable, brilliant with heroic exploits, beautiful literature, undefiled ideals.....He was prepared to arrest the growth of alien culture. His ears heard the music of the inspiring past. His eyes were fixed on coming victory. He opened the floodgates of his soul ; he sang of his hereditary culture. He inspired pāṭhaśālās ; he offered prayers from village to village ; he recited kathās from street to street ; he made his songs popular in every home. He kept alive religion and a sense of historic continuity. He preserved language, literature, inspiration, and ideals. And, thanks to him, the immortal spirit of the culture, breaking the bonds of political subjection, triumphed in the land.'¹

This literature took the form of an ākhyāna. In form, it was a rāsa ; but the narrative parts were brief, the arrangement more systematic, and the language more influenced by Saṃskṛta. In substance, it presented an independent literary composition based mainly on a free rendering

1. Munshi, Ādi Vachano. (Guj.) 24, of an ākhyāyikā from the Purāṇas, supplemented by portions borrowed from other sources or composed by the author himself.

IV

Bhālaṇa may be called the father of the ākhyāna. He was a Modha Brāhmaṇa by caste, a resident of Pāṭana. His date, tentatively fixed between 1426 and 1500, is yet uncertain. The incidents of his life, which enthusiastic admirers have unearthed, do not appear to have any reliable foundation. But his works show that he was a good student of the epics and the Purāṇas in the original.

In one of his works, he says :

Men of sentiment, who are fond of the Purāṇas, desire to hear them, but their desire remains unfulfilled. Bhālaṇa has, therefore, composed this poem in bhāṣā.

He appears to have supplied a growing need, and, on his own admission, evoked considerable antagonism from those who found his method undignified for a purāṇika of learning. He started life as a devotee of Śiva; but later, as his works show, fell under the influence of the Rāmānandī sect and transferred his allegiance to Rāma. He left two sons, Udhava and Viṣṇudāsa, both of whom, following in his footsteps with far less ability and equipment, have left parts of the Rāmāyaṇa.

His early works were mere renderings of the ākhyāyikas. But, later, he borrowed the episodes from several sources, pruned or altered them, and added fresh materials to produce a new work. He also travelled outside the Purāṇic field to compose a rāsa on Bāṇa's Kādambarī. In works presumably composed during his last days, the ākhyāna reached an advanced stage of evolution. It was a Gujarātī ākhyāyikā. With contemporary sentiments, and the Purāṇic plot and characters altered to suit them, it became a new and distinct literary form.

His Harasaṁvāda gives the episode from the S'iva Purāṇa, wherein Pārvatī, jealous of Gaṅgā whom Śiva had harboured in his matted locks, tries to win back the love of the god by assuming the guise of a forest-girl. Mrgī-ākhyāna, from the same Purāṇa, describes a hunter, who, unconsciously worshipping Śiva, obtains religious merit and goes to heaven. These, and Śaptaśati borrowed from the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, may be classed among his early works. They follow the original closely, relieved only by an occasional gleam of contemporary sentiment.

The deer in Mṛgī-ākḥhyāna when his mate is killed, addresses the hunter in a manner which does credit to the sentiments of the poet and to the atmosphere which permitted their expression.

With cunning skill, you slew my lovely bride, before my own eyes. Shame upon him who lives, when the mistress of his soul is dead! Without my bride, life has no aim; the world is desolate. Without her, my house and garden are lonely as the abodes of the dead. She was my support in trouble; I had no better friend.

Parallelisms of this nature were quite common in the literature of the period, and were employed by the poet with great effect.

V

To the next period of Bhālaṇa's literary activity belongs Kādambarī, perhaps the best of his works. It is an adaptation of Bāṇa's great work, carefully abridged with an eye to literary presentation. This work of Bhālaṇa is the best rāsa in the language, perhaps the most artistic and sustained composition, not even excepting the ākhyānas of Premānanda. It has all the good features of a rāsa, but without the loose structure, the monotonous descriptions, the ever-recurring didactic passages and the ill-concealed religious purpose which destroy the unity and charm of many of them. Some of the beauties of the original work are brought out with great skill in a language not possessing the wealth or elegance of Samskrta.

From the wealth of Bāṇa, Bhālaṇa chooses what his art and audience require, and presents it with the freedom of a master in the art of literary expression. At places the poem is word-perfect. Bhālaṇa's description of the Acchoda lake is a delightful picture painted with the help of a few of the great phrases from Bāṇa's elaborate masterpiece. The little parrot's tale of how it preserved life after its parents had been killed by the hunter, is one of the many passages in which the poet has given to a translation the charm of an original. The parrot finally says:

... King! What can I say? Nothing is so dear as life. Otherwise, how could I forget my dead father in the very moment in which I suffered so terrible a blow. No one could be so heartless as I. I forgot all gratitude. He had denied himself food to give it me; had kept me by his side with loving care; had brought me up under great hardship. But I forgot all grief at the loss of my parents and tried to save my life. Who could be so callous?

King, I was so tired that I could not even walk. The way was difficult to tread; my body was covered with dust; I was wretched; my feet tottered with fatigue. I longed for death, but it did not come. My sight was blurred; my heart trembled; my mind stood still. Thirst made me miserable, but water was far away. King! I stumbled at every step.¹

At another place, the poet graphically describes how the women of the royal place exchange remarks about each other. They are typically Gujarātī. Additions in the interest of realism are also made at appropriate places without destroying the flow of the poem.

Bhālāṇa is the greatest artist in the language for portraying parental and domestic feelings. The maid describes to Tarapīḍa his queen's yearning for a child in words full of grace and feeling.

While talking, Oh King, she says: "Life is wasted. I never kissed a child of mine, never pressed it close to my heart. I never saw the smiling face of a son, beautiful with two tiny teeth looking up to me as I fed him with milk. Never did I hear, with joyful heart, anklets jingling on his feet as he stumbled along on his toes. Oh! What shall I do now? I shall never see him return from school, ink-pot and writing-board in hand, running up to me, clinging to

-
1. राय ! घणूं शूं कहीइ कथी ? प्राण समूं कांइ वाहालं नथी,
 नहिरि ततक्षण मुउ तात, ते सवि वीसारी मि वात,
 तेह वेदना दारुण सही, मुझ ससु को निष्ठुर नहीं !
 भूखया रही जिणि दीधूं भक्ष, पाल्यु सनेह करी समक्ष,
 ने दोहिलि ऊछेर अपार, ते मुझ वीसरिउ उपकार !
 जननी जनक गयां परलोक, ते मि वीसार्यु सवि शोक ;
 देह राखवा कर्तुं उपाय ; कोइ दुष्ट मुझ सरखूं ? राय !
 श्रांत थकां मि नवि हींडाय ; विषम वाट ; तनु धूलि भराय ;
 दुःखातुर अति थाका चरण ; घणूं इ वांछूं नावि मरण.
 आवि अंधारूं लोचन, धूजि रिदि ; न चालि मन ;
 पीछि पिपासा ; वेगलं वारि ; ढली ढली पडूं, रा, तिणि ठारि.

me with the word 'Mama'. My heart longs for a mother's joy ; but the longing will never be fulfilled."¹

But this work, which modern students of the literature appreciate, does not appear to have evoked contemporary enthusiasm or to have been a subject of imitation.

Nalākhyāna, which followed, was similar in technique. The Mahābhārata, Śrīharsha's Naishadhiya and Trivikrama's Nalacampū have been laid under contribution to produce a short ākhyāna on the episode of Nala and Damayanti. Though the execution of this work is decidedly inferior to that of Kādambarī, it was the original of many subsequent copies.

V.

His other works are : Rāmaviraha and Rāmabālacarita from the Rāmāyana ; Jalaindharākhyāna from the Padma Purāṇa ; Durvāsākhyāna from the Mahābhārata ; Dhruvākhyāna, Rukminīharana, Satyabhāmāvivāha, Kṛṣṇa-Navishṭi, Kṛṣṇa-bāla-carita, and the Daśamaskandha from the Bhāgavata.

Bhālana made a free use of garabīs in the works dealing with Kṛṣṇa's life, and invested them with charm of language and delicacy of sentiment. The models furnished by him were copied by all later poets, including Dayarāma, and gave to garabī its distinctive form. The following garabī is still popular for the homely charm with which it describes the feelings of Jasodā, Kṛṣṇa's foster mother.

-
1. वात करती एम कहि, 'मिथ्या गयु ए काल ।
हृदि शूँ चांप्यु नहीँ, चुंबन देई बाल ॥
नाहाना नाहाना दंत बि, नि सुंदर मुखनु वान ।
पुत्र हसतु नहीँ दीठ, करावतां पयपान ॥
चरण वागि घूघरी, अंगुली बलगु जाय ।
ए सुख हूं पामी नहीँ ! हवि करूं किशु उपाय ॥
नेसालीथी भणी आवि, पाटी खडिउ हाथि ।
आइ ! कही बोलावतु धरि बाल घालि बाथि ॥
ए ऊरिउ वीतु नहीँ, जे पुत्रमाता नाम । '
एणी पिरि मनि दुःख आणि नित्य परति, स्वामि ॥

Come home, darling Māvaji ! I will give you milk and rice with a loving hand. You have grown rich since you went to Mathurā ; and, powerful too. But, believe me, none loves you more than I do. Devakī herself will not hold you more fondly in her arms than I held you in mine when nursing you. Her body will never be as mine was then, all quivering with rapture.

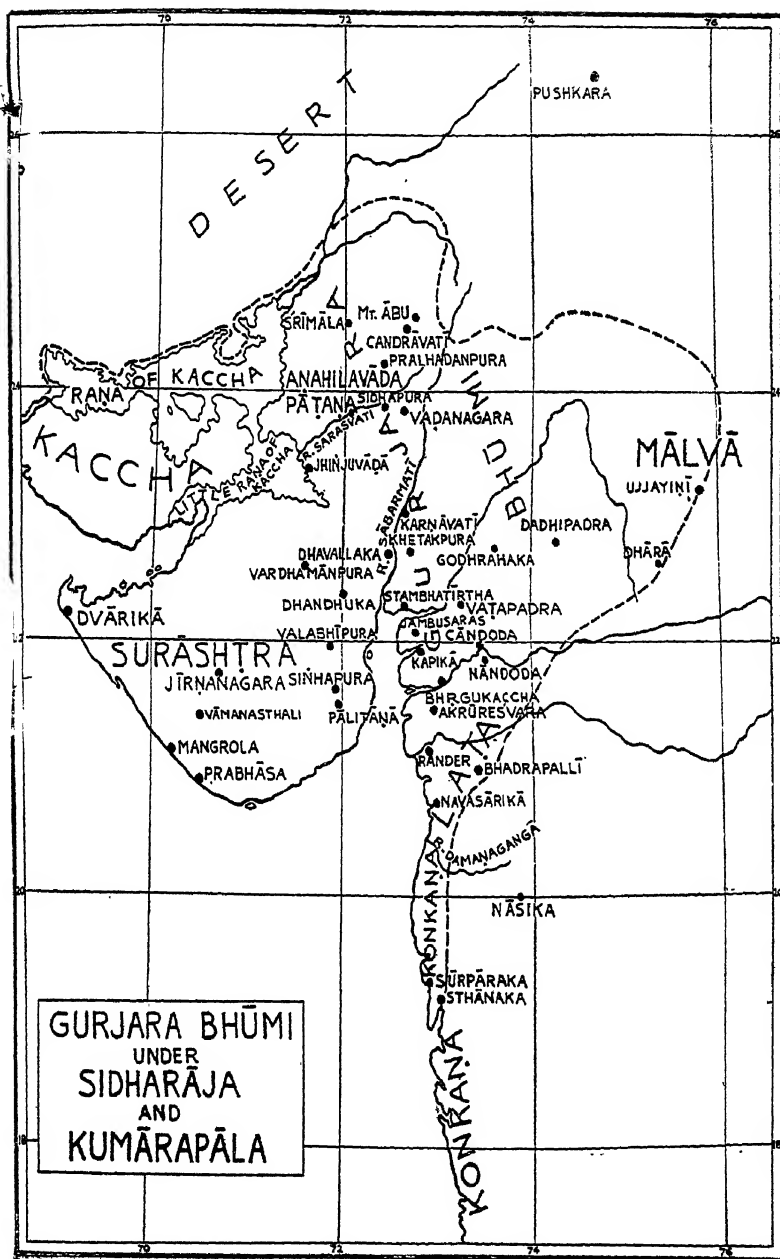

Alas ! I am your nurse, not your mother ; you know it now. I know why you are wroth : I tied your hands when you stole butter. Yes, and I did not jump after you in the Kālindi ; you remember it still ; you owe me a grudge for it. None else can win love, and forget it so lightly as you. Raghunātha ! Lord of Bhālāṇa ! Do remember your love for me, short-lived though it was.¹

The poet deserves a high place in literature as the pioneer of the new tradition, which, through ākhyānas, gave Gujarāta a new literature. Many authors have worked upon his ākhyānas, but none, except Premānanda, has improved upon them. His style is expressive and elegant. He knew the art both of translation and adaptation. As we read him, we note the remarkable change which two centuries, between Someśvara and Bhālāṇa had wrought. Style, verse, outlook, all had changed, and so also the literary quality.

The next poet whose work is available, Mantrīkarmaṇa (c. 1470), a Vaṇika by caste, has left an ākhyāna, Sitā-varaṇa, which is poor in style. Keśava Hṛderāma, a Kāyastha of Pātaṇa (c. 1473), composed Daśamaskandha, a version of Xth canto of the Bhāgavata. Bhīma, a Moḍha Brāhmaṇa of Siddhapura, composed some ākhyānas and a work entitled Harilīlāshodaśakalā, (c. 1484) borrowed from

1. મીઠડા માવજી રે, મારે મંદિર આવો;
પ્રેમે પીરસું પરમાનંદ, કુર ને દૂધ શીરાવો.
મથુરા રિદ્ધિ પામ્યા ઘણી, વાઘ્યું છે અતિ તેજ રે;
સહી જાળજો મારા સરસું, કો નહિં આળે હેજ.
ઘવરાવીને હૈંડે ચાંપતી, ત્યમ દેવકી નહિં ચાંપે રે;
રોમાંચિત મારી દેહડી થાતી, ત્યમ તેની નવ કાંપે.
માતા નહિં થાડં તમારી, ધાવ કહીને જાણો રે;
મેં બાંધ્યો જે માલખ માટે, તેણે રોષ ભરાણો.
કાલિંદી માંહે તમ ઉપર, જે હું નવ જાંપાવી રે;
જાણું છું તે વાત સંભારી, રીસ મનમાંહે આવી.
તેં કીધો ત્યમ કોય દે નહિં, પ્રીત કરીને છેદ રે;
ભાલળપ્રમુ રઘુનાથ સંભારો, એક ઘડીનો નેહ.

the Harilīlāmṛta of Bopadeva. The movement spread fast. Poets from different parts of Gujarāta composed similar ākhyānas, using the Bhāgavata, the Rāmāyaṇa and the Saptaśati for their models. A voluminous writer was Nākara (c. 1550), a Deśāvala Vaṇika of Baroda, who attempted a rendering of some parts of the Mahābhārata. He was unable to follow the original Saṁskṛta even with Bhāṣa's fidelity. Many of the Brāhmaṇa authors were gāgariā bhaṭas by profession.

were not, as it was once believed, the handiwork of any particular section of writers either Brāhmaṇa or Jaina. Long before the versions now available to us were composed, their originals had become indispensable to the masses as a source of culture and entertainment in the whole of India.

These stories, unlike dharmakathās, were not allegorical; nor did the didactic element in them subordinate the human. They were romances, pure and simple. A characteristic common to them was predominance of the miraculous. Witchcraft, incantation, transformation of the human body, revival of the dead, transition from one body into another were freely introduced. Fantastic adventures were no less common. Many of them had bourgeois setting, and described voyages and commercial enterprises. Robbery, seduction and kidnapping were by no means neglected.

They portrayed a free society, unknown to this period. They spoke of co-education; of women, free, educated and versed in the fine arts; of headstrong feminists; of hetairae, highly cultured and loyal; of a certain degree of general education. Love, intense and spontaneous, or betrayal of it, provided the principal motive; and ordinarily the miseries of lovers, parted by accident or intention, sustained the sentimental interest of the story. The outstanding shortcoming of this class of literature was failure to delineate human character. The hero of one story was like the hero of another; so, was the heroine; and so were the king and the hetairae—wooden and stereotyped.

Prahelikā, or a riddle, was a literary feature which they had inherited from their Samskrta forbears. Daṇḍin mentions sixteen kinds of prahelikās¹, and even fifty years ago, solving riddles or koydas was a popular pastime in Gujarāta. Heroine after heroine goes about offering meaningless or even obvious riddles to men, after having solemnly resolved to marry only the happy suitor who is clever enough to solve them. Perhaps, in an age of ignorance, this was the only kind of cleverness which appealed to intelligent women.

1. Kāvyaadarśa. III, 96-124.

II

The source largely drawn upon for these stories was the Vetālapañcaviṃśatikā. Candragupta II, the Gupta Emperor and the traditional Vikramāditya of Ujjayinī, is the hero of these miraculous tales. A yogī asked Vikrama to carry, without uttering a single word, a corpse hanging on a tree to a place where miraculous powers could be acquired by certain processes. The king took down the corpse, when the ghoul, Vetāla, residing in it, began to tell a story. At the end of the story, the ghoul put a question to the king. The king, forgetting the yogī's injunction, gave a reply, upon which the corpse disappeared, and was seen again hanging on the tree. This incident is repeated twenty five times, and every time Vetāla produces an interesting story.

Vikramāditya, styled paraduhkhabhanjana, the reliever of people in distress, is the king Arthur of India. At one time there was scarcely a house in Gujarāta, perhaps in many parts of India, where his exploits were not listened to with rapt attention. Sāmaḷa compares their recital with the Rāmāyaṇa. The first available work on these legends in old Gujarātī is by Madhusūdana Vyāsa (c. 1360) and is called Vikramacarita cupāi. Up to c. 1668 as many as five poets had composed works on these legends.

Another popular work is Sinhāsana dvātriṃśikā, composed by the sādhu Kshemaṅkara from original sources in Māhārāshtrī Prakṛta. In these tales, King Bhoja of Ujjayinī discovers the throne of Vikrama, on which are carved thirty-two statuettes. Every time Bhoja desires to seat himself on the throne, one of the statuettes asks him not to do so till he has been as generous and helpful as Vikrama. Thus each statuette in succession tells a story relating the exploits of Vikrama. The first available version of these stories in Old Gujarātī is composed by Malayacandra in c. 1463. Many authors wrote about them till c. 1721, when Sāmaḷa Bhaṭa re-wrote them.

Pañcatantra was revised in the thirteenth century by Pūrṇabhadra, a Jaina sādhu of Jhālora. In the fifteenth century, this work was twice rendered into Old Gujarātī.

Śukasaplāṭī was another fruitful source of popular tales. A man left for a foreign country, and, in his absence, his wife was tempted to break the marital vow. But her parrot was a clever bird. Every night, as the woman was tempted to leave the house in search of a love adventure, it started telling a story about a woman who extricated herself from difficulties. At a thrilling point in the story, the parrot would ask the woman how the heroine should act. When she confessed her inability to offer a way out, the parrot would tell her not to leave the house that night if she wanted to hear the solution. Thus, on every one of the seventy nights, the woman, attracted by a fresh story, gave up her intention of seeking a paramour. At the end of the period, the fortunate husband returned to find his wife as chaste as when he had left her. The first Gujarātī version (c. 1582) of these stories is by Ratnasundara, a Jaina sādhu. Tales of conjugal perfidy were always being heard with avidity, then as now.

Popular imagination, highly exercised over Vikrama, produced a number of other tales independently of Sanskrit sources. Maṅgalamāṇeka, a sādhu, composed about c. 1532 Vikrama ane Khāṇḍavācorarāsa based on such a tale. Similar tales were also told about Siddharāja who, to Gujarātīs, was a replica of Vikrama in valour and generosity. In c. 1549 Matisāra composed a work called Karpūramanjari, in which a statuette on the famous Rudramāla temples at Siddhapura tells a story of her love. In c. 1577 Kanakamudrā, composed a Karpūramanjari rāsa.

III

Another tale of wild, romantic love which fascinated Gujarāta was borrowed from Kāmakundalā Nāṭaka of Ānandadhara (c. 1300). It appears to have been popular both in North India and the Deccan, for we find it adapted both in Hindī and Marāṭhī. Gaṇapati, a son of Narasā Kāyastha, composed a Mādhavānala-dogdhaka-prabandha in Old Gujarātī at Āmod in c. 1528. It had evidently a wide appeal, for one of its copy was found in Bikaner¹. Gaṇapati's work consists of 2500 dogdhaka verses, and is inspired by a

1. Vide, Mujumdar's Article in Gujarātī Sāhitya, p. 411 (Guj.).

Madana Purāṇa, a Purāṇa of Love. Kuśalālābha wrote a Mādhava-kāmakunḍalā rāsa in c. 1560; Sāmala gave his own version of it and called it Mādhavānala; and a play based on it evoked interest even in modern times.

In the city of Pushpāvati, where Kāmasena rules, lives a Brāhmaṇa youth by name Mādhava, 'as handsome as Love'. The women of the town run after him, and the citizens beseech the king to get rid of so fruitful a source of trouble. The king, in a judicious mood, tries to test the intensity of the fascination exercised by the boy by bringing him before his queens. Finding him, however, a danger to his own domestic peace, the king promptly banishes him.

Mādhava, wandering from place to place, comes to Amarāvati. His extraordinary intelligence immediately draws the attention of the local king, who gives him an honoured place in his court. A hetaira, Kāmakunḍalā, the favourite of the king, is at the moment dancing. Mādhava watches her performance. Admiring her skill in dancing, undisturbed even by a bee which alights on her dress, he presents to her the very betel leaf, biḍā, which the king had presented to him as a mark of honour. The king angry at the scant courtesy shown by Mādhava to the royal present, orders him to leave the town. The young man with the curse of beauty upon him, while on his way to leave the city, meets Kāmakunḍalā. She invites him to her house. The two meet; both fall in love with each other, exchange spicy riddles and their spicier solutions and are happy. In the morning, both part from each other with breaking hearts. Gaṇapati puts the following prayer in Kāmakunḍalā's mouth:

The fair one whispers thus: "Mādhava, pray do not go. I will get a subterranean room made, and keep you there...If you like, I will lock you up in my heart. But do not move a step away from me. If you hide yourself in my eyes, I shall screen you with collyrium. I fall at your feet; I beg of you, do not go to a foreign land. Come to the mirror, and I will close you in with my arms around your neck (as a bee is enclosed in a lotus); the sun, when he rises, may open all other petals, but not the knot I will have tied you with. I will wear you inside the knot of my braid, as Lord Śiva wears Gaṅgā. I am a forlorn woman; I weep in distress. My Lord, do not leave me."¹

1 माधव तुम्हो म चालिसिउ गोरी झंपइ गूँझ ।

भलुं कराविशि भूइं मांहि राखिशि तुझ ॥

He goes to Ujjayinī, and describes his distress in verses, which he writes on the wall of a temple. Wandering in disguise about the city at night, as was his wont, to discover the miseries of his subjects, king Vikrama reads the verses; and he employs a dancing girl to find their love-lorn author. Mādhava is found, and, is brought to Vikrama. Apprised of the hero's love for Kāmakuṇḍalā, the 'reliever of distress' forthwith calls upon Kāmasena to give her up; and, on his refusal to do so, marches upon his city with an army.

Vikrama, however, wants to test the strength of Kāmakuṇḍalā's love. He goes to her in disguise and tries in vain to win her for himself. As a further test, he informs her that Mādhava is dead. On hearing of the death of her lover, Kāmakuṇḍalā becomes unconscious, and is on the point of death. The king comes back to his camp, and informs Mādhava of her death. The poor lover also faints. Vikrama, horror-struck at having killed a Brāhmaṇa, wants to commit suicide. The spirit Vetāla, his friend from the other world, comes to his rescue, and revives the lovers. They are married by the king with great pomp; and the lovers live happily ever afterwards. The Gujarātī poets have worked into this tale a history of the previous births of the lovers after the style of Taraṅgalolā.

Caurapāncāśikā is another love-story in Samskrta which attracted the attention of Gujarātī authors. Bilhaṇa, a poet from Kashmir, so runs the story, fell in love with the daughter of Kshitipāla, a king of the Punjab. The father, discovering his daughter's infatuation for the poet, banished him from his kingdom. The heart-broken poet poured

कहि तु कालिज माहां धरं राखूं हृदय मझारि ।
 मूझनिं मूकी माधवा पगलूं रखे पधारि ॥
 आविस माधवउ आंखि मांहा आडिं काजल देशि ।
 पगी लागूं छउं पीड तुझ म म जाइसि परदेशि ॥
 आव आरीसामांहि तुं बंभण बांधुं कंठि ।
 खितिपति खुलइ खप करी किम्हइ न छूटइ गंठि ॥
 आज अमोढामांहि धरं ईशतणइ जिम गंग ।
 हुं विलपंती विरहिणि स्वामी म छंडिसि संग ॥

forth his feelings of sorrow and disappointment in the fifty verses of this work.¹ Some Gujarātī poet has prefixed another poem of seventy-four verses to this one, giving a local turn to this romantic incident. According to this poem, King Virasinha of Pāṭaṇa employs Bilhāṇa to teach his daughter Śāsikalā. The teacher and the pupil fall in love with each other and are secretly married. When the king discovers the marriage he sentences the poet to death. This story has been worked upon by Jñānācārya in his Bhilhanākāvya (c. 1500). Sāmala Bhaṭa has incorporated the story in his Madanamohanā.

IV

But Gujarātī poets also composed original stories. Māru-dholācupāi by Kuśalalābha (c. 1561) is the most attractive of such stories. Another version by an unknown poet was composed in c. 1601, and yet another was written in c. 1616 by Ānaṇḍodaya. Dayabhai, a modern dramatist, has drawn upon the story for his play, Umā-Devdī.

The language of Kuśalalābha's work, parts of which are in prose, presents the Rājasthānī aspect of Old Gujarātī. The plot is realistic; and the sentiments and imagery have an old-world flavour. It is a beautiful love-poem of old Gujarāta, fresh with local colour. The note of love sounds true and intense in its appeal as in no other poem of the age. The poet unequivocally admires the sentiment of Sṛṅgāra. 'It is the principal among the nine rasas. It pleases the gods; it is the friend of women. Respect for the plighted word, affection, humour, pathos, voluptuousness, laughter, love, and the joy of reunion, all are found in it.'

In the city of Puṅgala in Māravāḍa, lived king Piṅgala. He receives an offer to marry Umadevī, the beautiful daughter of Sāmaṇtasinha of Jhālora. Umā has already been twice betrothed, once to the king of Pāṭaṇa, and again to king of Junāgaḍha. But the mother of the princess dislikes Gujarāta. "Gujarāta is full of diseases and lunatics. Weak men and shameless women live there. How can we give the princess to such a country?" Ultimately, recourse is had to a trick; the date of marriage is fixed, but the kings of Junāgaḍha and Pāṭaṇa are informed of it so late as not to permit of a journey from their capitals to Jhālora. On the appointed day, Piṅgala alone is present, and is married to Umā.

1. Sir Edwin Arnold has rendered the work in English.

Umā gives birth to Māru, short for Māruvaṇī, 'whose body is as fragrant as kasturi'. When she is a year and a half old, a famine overtakes the land; and Piṅgala and his people seek a more favoured land near Pushkaratirtha. Nala, the king of Nalavaragaḍha, comes there on a pilgrimage with his queen and a three-year-old boy, Salhakumāra whose pet name is Ḍholā.

The two kings become friends, and cement their friendship by marrying the baby Ḍholā with the infant princess. Nala then returns to his own country and, through time and distance, becomes indifferent to the marriage of his little son. Ḍholā grows up ignorant of his marriage, and is married to Mālavaṇī, a princess of Mālvā.

Ḍholā, who is fond of horses, makes friends with a horsedealer. The horse-dealer, when he goes to Piṅgala, learns to his surprise that the king's daughter has been married to his friend Ḍholā, and is awaiting an invitation from her husband. He informs Piṅgala's men about Ḍholā's marriage with the princess of Mālvā. The information reaches Māru. With an aching heart, she goes about sending messages to the husband whom she has loved from infancy. Piteously she addresses a sārasi bird in the lake:

Bird! lend me your wings; I shall ever be grateful. Flying across the seas, I will go, meet my lover, and then give them back to you. This land of the North is oppressive; my heart lives in the South. ¹

But the bird does not listen to her. It flies away. 'Unfortunate indeed is she who has been deserted by her mate'.

In distant Nalavaragaḍha, Ḍholā's mother lets fall a reference to the marriage in the presence of her son, who thus comes to know of the wife he has married in infancy. But the jealousy of his wife, Mālavaṇī, is roused. She

-
1. कुरजां आपो पंषडी थांको विनो वहेस;
सायर लंघे ग्रीउ मिलां, ग्रीउ मिल पाछी देस.
उतर दिस उपराठीयां, दिषण सांसुं हीयांह.

causes messengers from Puṅgala to be killed, so that no message of Māru is ever delivered to her husband.

King Puṅgala is surprised that none of his messengers ever return. Finally, Māru sends her message through wandering minstrels.

Wanderer! Give a message to Dholā...Come to me soon, beloved! Without you, your bride is heart-broken; a bow without the string... Love! If you do not come by the beginning of Śrāvaṇa, the lightning will fall, and I shall die in fear..... Day and night, I weep, for I am lonely without you. Daily I worship the direction in which you live; my eyes have not closed in sleep since you left. Love, Come soon. Else, be assured, the crows will fly over the dead body of Māru''.¹

The message reaches Dholā. He wants to leave for Puṅgala, but Mālavaṇī, anxious to keep him to herself, induces him to put off his visit on one excuse or another.

Now, my beloved, the rains have come; the roads are muddy; the creepers cling to the trees, women, to men.²

Dholā sends a bard with a message to Māru, and prepares to go, in spite of the protests and wails of Mālavaṇī. The latter even requests the riding camel to feign lameness, but all her efforts to put obstacles in the way of her impati-

1. पंथी एक संदेसडो, ढोलानै समजाय ;

.

विहलो आवे वलहा

तो विण धण वीलषी फिरै, गूण विण लाल कवाण.

.

जो तुं ढोला नावीयो, श्रावण पैहली तीज;

सैहरां षवेशी वीजली, मुंघ मरेसी षीज.

.

हुं रुनी निसदिन भरि, सुणि ढोला तुं जोय;

जिण दिस तुं सजन वसै, तिण दिस मोहि सलांम;

जबथी हम तुम वीछडे, तबथी नयणे नीद हराम.

.

ढोला आज्यौ वेगसुं, न आया तो निमलेस;

मारु तणै करंकडै, वायस उडा वेस.

2. पावस आयो प्रीतम, पगे विलंबी गार,
वनां विलंबी वेलडी, नरां विलंबी नार.

ent husband are in vain. She is, however, successful in exacting a promise from him that he will not start on his journey as long as she is awake. Mālavaṇī then tries to give up sleep, but nature is too strong for her; and one day, as she falls asleep, Ḍholā takes the road to Puṅgala. Mālavaṇī wakes up to find her husband gone and bewails her lot.

Cursed is the land which has no mountain. If there had been one here, I would have thrown myself from it. Love, I go mad when I see a bed; like a black cobra, it poisons me.

She sends a parrot to bring her husband back. The parrot flies to Ḍholā, and tells him to return. "Mālavaṇī will die without you." Ḍholā replies heartlessly, "Go, collect wood and, when she dies, cremate her."

Approaching Puṅgala, Ḍholā sees Māru as she comes with her friends to fetch water from a well outside the town. The parted lovers meet, and, are received with joy by Māru's parents.

My lover whom I awaited has come. The pillars dance; the house smiles; the bed-steads reel with joy.¹

After a few days spent in pleasure of all kinds, Ḍholā, with his bride, sets off for his native land. People warn him against the jealousy of one Umar Sumarā whose offer for Māru's hand has been rejected. On the way, a serpent bites Māru and she dies. Ḍholā prepares to die with her on the same pyre, removes his ornaments, and gives a message to his camel to be delivered to his parents.

But God Saṅkara and his spouse hasten to the rescue of true love, and Māru is revived. Resuming their journey, Ḍholā and Māru meet Umarā's men. They induce Ḍholā to join them in a drinking bout, intending to kill him when drunk, and to capture Māru. She comes to know of the plan and warns him. Hotly pursued by Umarā's men, the galloping camel bears them in safety to Nalavaragaḍha. Every one is happy, and Māru and Mālavaṇī, both basking in their husband's love, live like two sisters.

1. ते साजन पधारीया, ज्यारी जोती वाट,
थांम कुदै धरि हसै, षेरुण लागी घाट.

V

Another popular story, Vidyāvilāsa, is taken from Vinayacandra's Mallināthamahākāvya (c. 1229) in Samskrta. The first Gujarātī version of the story, written by Hirānanda under the name Vidyāvilāsano Pavāḍo, is dated 1429. The most racy and popular version of it, undoubtedly, is that of Śāmala under the name Vinecatanivārlā.

In the town of Kāñcanapura lives Śrīpāla, the nagara śetha. He calls his four sons and asks them the best way to make money. Three of them indicate the normal methods of business, but the fourth, Śrīvatsa, an idiot, talks sedition. "I will rule as our king does" says he; and his father drives him out of the house.

Śrīvatsa goes to Ratnapura and attends school, where his dullness earns for him the name mūrkhacāṭa, the fool. Among his fellow-pupils are Saubhāgyamañjarī, the king's daughter, and the son of the minister. The princess is in love with the minister's son, but he does not encourage her. The princess is insistent. The reluctant lover plays a trick upon her; he persuades the idiot to impersonate him as bridegroom, marry the princess, and run away with her during the night.

Before leaving the city, Śrīvatsa goes to offer his parting salutations to his teacher. Taking pity on the idiot, the teacher invokes Sarasvatī, the goddess of learning, and gives him some water endowed with the miraculous power of making a man learned. The idiot drinks the water, and, on the instant, he sheds his idiocy like a cast off skin. The princess, under the impression that she has married her lover, silently travels with him the whole night on a camel. When the dawn comes, she discovers to her horror that she has married the wrong man, and that too the idiot.

They come to Ujjayinī. Śrīvatsa, now poet and scholar, earns fame and the title of vidyā-vilāsa, one who delights in learning. Śrīvatsa's learning attracts the king's attention and he is appointed prime minister. Meanwhile, the unhappy princess, ignorant of the transformation her husband has undergone, lives in an upper storey of the house, bewailing the lot which has tied her to a fool. The princess, having known her husband from his boyhood, declines to believe in his reputed learning.

King Ratnaketu learns that his minister, though able to win over every one, has failed to win the heart of his own wife, and, curious to see the woman who could not be won by so charming and learned a husband, invites himself to dinner at their house. To frustrate the king's curiosity, the princess wears, in turn, three different dresses, and the king fails to ascertain which of the three ladies serving him is his minister's wife.

The king's curiosity remains unabated. He gives orders that his minister's wife should come and sing at a festival held outside the town in honour of the guardian deity. The princess makes what she thinks an impossible condition. "I will sing only if my husband plays an instrument in accompaniment!" says she. To her surprise, the condition is accepted. The minister plays upon the instrument to perfection, and she has to sing. The people are transported with joy at the skill of both, and the king has them carried in a procession through the city.

During the procession, the princess loses her ring. And for the first time after their marriage Saubhāgyamañjarī speaks to her husband, when she asks him to find it. Śrīvatsa goes back in search of the ring, but is inadvertently locked out of the city at night. Being in a hurry to return to his wife, he tries to enter the city through a gutter, and, in doing so, is bitten by a snake.

A courtesan, who sees what has befallen him, takes him to her house and cures him of the snake-bite. Śrīvatsa, in return, promises to grant any favour she might ask. The hetaira demands that he should live with her as her paramour, and, as a man of honour, he has to keep his promise. Unwilling to take risks, the woman ties round his foot a charm which immediately turns him into a peacock.

Peacock by day and paramour by night, poor Śrīvatsa leads a miserable existence. One day, Śrīvatsa, the peacock, flies to his own terrace, and hears Śaubbhāgyamañjarī bewailing the loss of a husband whom she has come to love too late. On the following day, he again visits his home. On this occasion, his wife's friend happens to untie the charm, and he resumes his own form. The husband recounts his tale of woe to the wife, but insists on being turned into a peacock, for a word plighted even to a courtesan must be kept. And once more a bird, he flies back.

But the princess reports all she has heard from her husband to the king, who retrieves him. Śrīvatsa, now restored to his usual form, is honoured by the king. Giving him his daughter in marriage, the king retires to a forest. Śrīvatsa succeeds to the throne, marches on the city where his father lives, and, defeats its king. The story ends with the reunion of the father and son.

VI

There are two other love-stories of a still more fantastic kind, in which romantic lovers pass through a succession of lives in order to attain a happy union. One is Hansāvalī, the available Gujarātī versions being of c. 1355, 1457, and 1617, the last by a poet of the name of Śivadāsa. This poet also wrote a tale called Kāmāvalī, which Virji, the pupil of Premānanda, re-wrote in c. 1669. The heroines of these two stories are a class by themselves. They begin as man-hating feminists, become love-lorn damsels, and end as loving wives. There is yet another popular story called Śilavatīno rāsa, in which the loyal wife of a merchant sojourning abroad is believed to be carrying an illegitimate child, and is driven out of the family. Tragic adventures befall her, but, in the end, she and her husband come together. Matters are explained; the child is proved to be legitimate; and the wife is taken back, her honour fully established. There are three versions of the story dated c. 1547, c. 1580 and c. 1644 respectively. Sāmala has adapted the story in Bhadrābhāminī.

One other tale, Sadayavatsa-Sāvalingā, has charmed Gujarāta for about five hundred years. Sadayavatsa and Sāvalingā, husband and wife, are banished from their native city, and are separated. Ultimately they meet after undergoing fearful experiences, in all of which the fantastic vies with the miraculous. The story is possibly taken from some unknown Prākṛta source. Its first available Gujarāṭi version is dated c. 1410, and many versions have followed. In the villages, its latest version still holds the field against modern stories.

VII

During the fifteenth century the literary activity of the Jaina sādhus was as brisk as before, though its direction underwent a change. They were at an advantage compared to the Brāhmaṇas in those troublous times. They were not burdened by family or social ties. Except during the monsoon, they were always on the move, immune from the political misfortunes which had overtaken Gujarāṭa. Their literary tradition was intact, for their clientele was rich enough to preserve the integrity of the upāśrayas which sheltered them, their pupils and their libraries. As they travelled from the Punjab to the Deccan, their outlook grew wide and varied, while their solitary life left them sufficient leisure to acquire a thorough knowledge of Saṃskṛta and Apabhramśa literature.

The sadhu composed caritas of the self-same tirthaṅkaras, cakravartins and saints as the literary sādhus before him had done. Just as the Brāhmaṇical author was obsessed by certain Purāṇic heroes, he was by Bharata, Rṣhabhadeva, Neminātha and Sthūlibhadra. He wrote about them in tedious, monotonous rhyme. Sometimes he varied his theme by writing about Kumārapāla and Vastupāla. He also tried his hand at philosophic discussions, sermons, sajjāyas or eulogies of places of pilgrimage, and other religious subjects. But, unfortunately, religious propaganda was the sole ostensible excuse for his resorting to literature; and, consequently, his work suffered from a surfeit of religious and moral bias. He lacked the emotion of bhakti to elevate his utterance to even comparatively artistic poetry. With lapse of time, even his stories lost in interest, for, every incident had to be moulded to a narrow, rigid code of life.

VIII

Some of the Jaina poets have hitherto suffered unmerited neglect. Their language for a time was treated as archaic;

the religious and moral precepts with which they sowed their compositions repelled both scholar and reader ; and the unbalanced praise of Jaina scholars more often than not retarded a due recognition of their real worth.

The most notable author of the sixteenth century was Lāvanyasamaya, an author of considerable literary attainments. His original name was Laghurāja. He was born in c. 1485 in a Śrīmālī Vaṇika family of Ahmedābād, and was initiated as a Jaina sādhu at the age of eight. His autobiographical note in Vimalaprabandha runs :

Through the favour of Sarasvatī, I became a poet in my sixteenth year and so I have composed excellent rāsas, with parts in prose and parts in poetry, using chanda, kavītā and cupāi. I have also composed songs and poems in different tunes, and also dialogues.

He composed over twenty nine works. Four of these are rāsas of tirthankaras and saints. One is Rāvaṇamāṇḍa-darīśamvāda, c. 1506, a work based on the Rāmāyaṇa, being a dialogue between Sita's abductor and his wife. The other is Devarājavatsarājacupāi, a story of the ordinary type. He also wrote the well-known Vimalaprabandha, c. 1512, and other religious and ethical poems.

Vimalaprabandha, or Vimalarāsa, purports to be a biography of Vimalaśā, the minister of Bhīma I, the Cālukya king of Pāṭaṇa ; but it has scarcely any historical value. It is a story based purely on tradition. But, such as it is, it is better than the rāsas on historical persons of the centuries following, and represents an intermediate step between the historical prabandha of Merutuṅga and the popular legend of Ṛshabhadāsa. This prabandha was rendered into Samskṛta in c. 1522 by Saubhāgya.

The prabandha begins with a description of the Hemakūṭa mountain ; of the foundation of Śrīmāla by the goddess Laxmī (canto i) ; of the origin of the castes known as Śrīmālas, Ośvālas and Poravāḍas ; of good omens ; of the eighty castes of the Vaiśyas ; of their social customs (canto ii) ; and of the iniquities prevalent in the Kaliyuga. (canto iii). The birth of Vimala is then described. The auspicious signs on his body foreshadowing greatness are mentioned. The ceremony of putting him to school and the way he completes his studies are next described,

Afraid of their enemies, his mother takes him to her father's village, where he acquires knowledge of arts and skill in arms through the favour of the goddess Āmbājī. He is betrothed, and also discovers a buried treasure (canto iv). The auspicious signs on the body of a bride, the virtues of a good woman—rather a formidable number—the marriage of Vimāla and Śrīdevī, and the festivities accompanying it are then described (canto v). The poet depicts their joy with an unusual restraint :

Lovely flowers spread their fragrance in beautiful gardens. There, they sport in dalliance; make coronets of campā flowers and crown each other; they gambol in fountains.

Vimāla then goes to live in Pāṭaṇa. King Bhīma is jealous of the rich and brave Vimāla, and tries to have him killed by a tiger; but Vimāla kills the tiger (canto vi). Tired of the persecutions of the king, Vimāla leaves Pāṭaṇa, captures Cāndrāvātī, near Mount Abu, and becomes its ruler. A traveller tells him of the twelve sultans in the city of Rome who have made it their business to destroy the Hindus. Vimāla marches on them with his army, which is described in detail. A battle follows. Vimāla is victorious, and returns to his city in triumph (canto vii). Then is described Vimāla's war with the Brāhmaṇa king of Ṭhaṭhā in Sindha, (canto viii) and, finally, the reader is treated to an account of the greatness of Jaina religion and to an autobiographical note (canto ix).

Vimāla was a heroic figure during the days preceding those of Siddharāja, but the story of the poet is entirely fictitious. For a study of contemporary manners the work is invaluable, but, as literature, of little worth.

IX

Half a century after Lāvāṇyasamaya, we encounter Naya-sundara. He lived between c. 1560 and 1620; resided for a long time in Gujarāṭa; and had a lady disciple, Hemaśrī, who composed Kanakāvatī (c. 1585). Nayasundara, like all Jaina sādhus, travelled far and wide, and was a student of the Saṃskṛta, Prākṛta, Hīndī and Urdu literatures. He left three social rāsas—Rūpacandrakuinvararāsa (c. 1581), Surasundarīrāsa (c. 1590), and Prabhāvatīrāsa, besides one Purāṇic rāsa, Naladamayanti and two religious works.

Rūpacandrārāsa is one of the best written social rāsas of the century. The miraculous elements are to some extent repressed, or relegated to interlude tales. The diction is inaccurate, but ornate, and largely influenced by Samskrta. It contains a much larger element of local and foreign words, is more rhetorical than Bhāṣa's, and, at places, develops a music and elegance of its own. The detailed descriptions of the conventional sort are often relieved by a freshness of outlook and humour.

After the inevitable description of lands, the prosperity of Mālvā is described, 'the happy land which has no thieves, where there is plenty of affection but no selfishness'. Then is given a detailed account of its capital, Ujjayinī, of its palaces, temples and marts 'with bejewelled merchants, fat and handsome, whose hands never leave off twisting their mustaches, their gaze fixed on customers'. In that city, resided a merchant Dhanadatta and his wife Dhana-sundarī. The author points out at great length how a good woman is a blessing and a bad one a curse (canto i).

The merchant and his wife had a son, Rūpadeva. His infancy is described with a wealth of realistic detail. Rūpadeva is put to school and the ceremony connected with going to school is described, as also the subjects he learns there. The thirty-two qualities of a perfect man are then enumerated. Rūpacanda's marriage, and the ceremonies, dinner and festivities connected with it, are described with picturesque details, (canto ii). The description holds good in every respect in many parts of Gujarāta and Māravāḍa even to-day.

Guṇasena, a tributary of the king of Kanauja, comes to live in Ujjayinī with his beautiful daughter Sohāga, who has decided not to marry. She attains her seventeenth year. 'The flood of youth increases, and Kāmadeva, the god of love and youth, comes and lives in her body'. She wants to see a drama, but her friend restrains her. "How can song and dance be heard and seen by an unmarried girl?" The girl feels very miserable, for she has not yet found the man whom she could love. How is she to find him? The friend asks her to have confidence in her womanly instincts. A woman always wins.

In a moment, she weeps, and, in a moment again, she smiles and puts the minds of helpless men on trial. She can speak one thing and do another. A woman has no peer in the world.

The friend then tells her the story of the clever wife of King Vikrama's son, and, in telling it, relates a few miraculous events (canto iii). But Sohāga longs for a husband fit to be her mate. The friend first brings her king Vikrama as a suitor; but he is unable to solve the riddles proposed by the girl, and is rejected. Sohāga then asks her to fetch Rūpacānda, she has seen him buying betel leaf at the shop opposite her house. The friend goes to the young merchant but finds him unresponsive. But she persists:

She saw you once with her eyes, but she has been mad after you since. Her every moment is endless as a hundred years. Dame Lotus lives in the lake and the Sun in the sky; but she blooms only when he appears.¹

And the poet declares :

When you look at a man, and your body and mind rejoice and the eyes grow fond, do not desert him even if life departs.²

Rūpacānda comes to Sohāga and is struck by her perfect beauty. Then follows a conventional description of her limbs with stereotyped similes. He falls in love with her at once. 'Again and again he looks at her, for his eyes are insatiate'. The lovers then spend the night together. Sohāga is happy.

He is the very lover who visited her in her dreams; she decides to borrow the thousand eyes of Indra to be able to look at him again and again.

A passage at arms in solving riddles follows. Their sports are then described in the usual fulsome style (canto iv).

- १ एक बार तुं नयणथी, दीठो दूर रखाँय;
तिहाँथी लागो वेधडो, क्षण वर्षा सो थाय.
कमलिनी सरवरमां वसे, सूर्य वसे आकाश;
जब देखे पिउ आपणो, तब ते थाय विकास.
- २ जे दीठे तन मन हसे, नयणां धरे सनेह,
ते माणस नवि मूकिये, प्राण त्यजे जो देह.

Spies inform the king that the girl who rejected him has accepted Rūpacāṇḍa. In the morning, the offended king sends for Dhanadatta and his sons. The mahājana of the town, anticipating the king's wrath, accompanies the merchant. The description is very picturesque, and gives an excellent idea of the mahājanas in India who brought to bear the pressure of public opinion on irresponsible kings. The king lets go all except Rūpacāṇḍa. He takes him to his palace and inquires how he solved the riddles of Sohāga. The young man feigns stupidity :

I am a merchant and can only weigh spices. A Vaṇīka is stupid. I only do business by telling nonsensical half-truths. How can I, who spend my life like this, know so much ?¹

The king has him whipped like a thief through the streets of the city. But Rūpacāṇḍa declines to disclose his secret. The unrelenting king gives orders for his execution. Hearing this, the town in is a ferment. Pressure of public opinion ultimately induces the king to rescind the order.

The king's curiosity to discover the solution of the riddles propounded by Sohāga is still irrepressible. He marries his daughter to Rūpacāṇḍa in order to warm them out of him. Sohāga writes a touching epistle, to which Rūpacāṇḍa forwards a suitable reply. Later, the princess, who by then has become a dutiful wife, asks Rūpacāṇḍa how he solved the riddles of Sohāga. The husband, bound by promise, tells the solution to his wife, the princess, who communicates them to her father. The king, in a fit of joy, celebrates the marriage of Rūpacāṇḍa and Sohāga. The rest of the poem, unconnected with the main story, relates the adventures of Siddhasena Divākara and the conversion of Vikrama to Jainism. In course of time, Rūpacāṇḍa becomes a sādhu.

Nayasūndara's Naladamayanīrīśa is considered to be a rendering of a lost Saṁskṛta work called Nalāyana, com-

-
- १ अमो हिंगितोल वाणिजा, ओछा वणिगतणा प्राणिजा.
करीए विविधपरे व्यापार, जूयां साचां लवी अपार;
इण परे धरनो निर्वाह करे, तो तेहने ए किम सांभरे ?

posed by Māṇikyacandra in Divā in Gujarāṭa (c. 1220). It is not in the author's best style; but, with this work composed a hundred years earlier, one can easily understand how Premānaṇḍa came to write his masterpiece. Surasundarīrāsa is a comparatively inferior work. It is a rapid recital of the adventures which overtake a princess abandoned in a forest by her husband.

Nayasundara represents the authors in Old Gujarāṭi who adopted a style and manner exactly the reverse of Bhālāṇa's. Bhālāṇa introduced the essential features of rāsa, namely, popular sentiments and the forms in which they were expressed into what was primarily a rendering of a Saṁskṛta poem. His object was to create a literature for a fairly intelligent class which had lost touch with Saṁskṛta. Nayasundara enriched old rāsa stories with a wealth of literary and emotional reminiscences from Saṁskṛta works, and thereby produced a work which helped to raise the level of popular literature. Both these movements starting from a different point of view met in the next century, when literature took a well-defined shape suited to the taste of the people as a whole. Purāṇic ākhyāyikās became popular tales and popular tales became transformed into poems of literary workmanship; at the same time, long and stereotyped descriptions remained inartistic feature of both.

X

Kusumśrīrāsa by Gangāvijaya is an interesting piece of social rāsa composed in c. 1652. It is written in popular diction, approximating to Modern Gujarāṭi and unburdened by Saṁskṛta words and imagery. The story, which is mainly in duhā with conversations in deśī, is well-told. The author's technique is superior to that of many other well-known poets. His sly humour is unusual with old Gujarāṭi authors. One of the interlude tales, perhaps borrowed from an old source, is very interesting.

Dhanasundara, a merchant living in the town of Ratnapura, goes abroad on a trading enterprise, leaving his wife Dhanavati in the care of his friend, Purohita, the priest of the king. Purohita comes to the merchant's and is well received by the lady. Attracted by her beauty and intelligence, he declares his love to Dhanavatī. She tries to reason with him, but the priest is not to be put off. The helpless lady makes an appointment with him for the first quarter of the night; and, not knowing how to get rid of this disloyal friend of her husband, goes to Durgapāla, the commandant of the fort, with the complaint. Durgapāla, equally struck with the charms of the unfortunate lady, promises to get rid of the priest if he himself is received as a favoured lover. She is in a quandary and gives him an appointment for the second quarter of the night.

In her terrible plight, she turns to the minister who is very properly shocked at the conduct of the two officials, and promises to get rid of them if she will accept him as a lover. She makes an appointment with him for the third quarter of the night, and approaches the king, as the final court of appeal, for protection against the evil intentions of his officers. He promises protection promptly, but on the very same condition the others had imposed. The lady, now desperate, invites him to come to her in the fourth quarter of the night.

Dhanavatī, though in distress, has the ingenuity to discover a means of escape out of this four-fold calamity. She has a long box with four compartments opening separately, brought down to her room. She also takes an old neighbour into her confidence and gets her to help carry out her plan of action. She requests her to spread a rumour in the town early next morning that news had been received of her husband's death, to collect the ladies of the town, and to come to her house.

The fateful night arrives. The priest arrives smartly dressed and self-satisfied. Dhanavatī, sweet, affectionate and ready to yield, invites him to dinner. At the end of the first quarter, the commandant knocks at the door. The priest is frightened and is induced by the lady to conceal himself in one of the compartments of the trunk.

The commandant enters. He, too, is well received and is entertained with talk and food. Time flies; the minister knocks at the door; and Dhanavatī obligingly accommodates the commandant in another compartment of the trunk. The minister, like the two that preceded him, seeks safety in the third compartment of the trunk when the king knocks at the door. The lady's fascinating talk diverts the king, but just as he feels that he is gaining ground, the women of the town arrive beating their breasts with lamentations at Dhanasundara's death. Frightened, the king finds security in the fourth compartment of the trunk.

News of Dhanasundara's death spreads in the town. As Dhanasundarī is a childless widow, the authorities, according to law, want to take possession of the merchant's wealth. But the king, the minister, the general and the priest are not to be found. Ultimately, the queen orders the officers to take possession of the dead man's wealth. When the officers arrive at her house, Dhanavati, all tears, confesses her ignorance of the whereabouts of her husband's wealth, but points to the trunk as, perhaps, the only receptacle which may contain it. The officers find the trunk very heavy, and, anticipating a rich addition to the royal coffers, hastily carry it to the queen.

The queen, struck with the heaviness of the trunk, is anxious to acquaint herself with the exact amount of wealth it contains. Dismissing the servants, she opens the first compartment. Out walks the priest, and the queen, perplexed, asks him how he came to be there. The priest, without offering any explanation, requests her to open the second. The process is continued; the second, the third, and the fourth compartments are opened; and the general, the minister and the king all stand before the queen, dumbfounded in self-confessed guilt.

XI

Another sādhu of considerable literary powers was Samayasundara, who flourished between c. 1580 and 1642. He was an indefatigable author, and composed about twenty long works, besides a large number of small poems. Many of his works are rāsas in the orthodox style and deal with tirthaṅkaras and saints. He wrote Naladamayanīrāsa (c. 1617), and Sitārāmcupāi (c. 1627). He used many new dhālas or deśī melodies which, on his own testimony, became popular. The rhetorical flavour of his style and his humorous descriptions both closely approach Premānanda's. His vivid picture of Kṛṣṇa as an astrologer in Sāmbapradyumna, but for its older language, might be mistaken to be from the pen of the latter.

Yet, another Jaina author, R̥shabhadāsa, must be mentioned, if not for his literary merits, at least for the untiring energy with which he spun his thirty-two works. His literary activities were spread over a period from c. 1617 to 1632. About sixteen of his works are rāsās on tirthaṅkaras and saints. There are two on Kumārapāla, and one on Hiravijaya, an eminent Jaina preceptor (c. 1517-1596) who induced Emperor Akbar to issue firmāns prohibiting violence to animals on certain days in the year, and who, in consequence, assumed mythological proportions for his pupils. The poet spun out his rāsas in a dull and uniform style. He lacked the art of telling a story; like many other so called poets of the period, he had nothing new to say.

CHAPTER VI

AKHO AND THE GOSPEL OF OTHER-WORLDLINESS.

The Moguls—Economic conditions of Gujarāta—Social life—Veṅkaṭadhvarin on Gujarāta—Other-worldliness—Akhā Bhakta (1615-1674)—Life—Works—Chappās—Philosophical works—His influence.

In the sixteenth and the seventeenth centuries, Gujarāta regained lost ground. As a province of the Mogul Empire, it enjoyed a sort of settled existence and grew prosperous once again. The people succeeded in confining political influences to limited spheres, and stiffened social barriers so as to secure contentment and happiness within narrow grooves. Restricted life drove restive minds to harp upon the worthlessness of the world, while the prevailing contentment led genial spirits of the age to create a new literary tradition.

I

When Akbar, in 1573, formed the province of Gujarāta, he sliced off some districts, annexing them to Khāndesha and Mālvā. Māravāḍa, also, was finally separated from Gujarāta. The province was largely immune from wars and land-taxes, though the great nobles to whom the Emperor entrusted government administered it by deputies, who never cared to carry out the constructive policy enjoined by the imperial edicts. Except for an invasion of South Gujarāta in 1600 by Malik Ambar, the governor of the Nizam at Daulatabad, this state of affairs continued till 1644. In that year Aurangzib, then the viceroy, gave the province a fore-taste of the intolerant policy which was to characterize his rule.

After Aurangzib came to the throne, Śivājī first invaded Surat in 1664, and the imperial authority grew weak. Soon the Marāṭhā raids became a normal feature of life. Bāglāna, the guardian fortress of the south, passed into their hands in 1672. They raided Broach in 1675, and again in 1685; Surat in 1699; and Broach, once again, in 1705. Two years later Aurangzib died, and the Mogul Empire began tottering to a fall.

II

Under the Moguls, Gujarāta regained its prosperity. Cambay was the most flourishing port in India. "It was impossible," wrote Varthema, a European traveller (1503-1508) "to describe its excellence". Surat was another port of international importance. Ghoghā as a port rose into prominence. Padre Ovington (1690) was in ecstasy at the matchless ingenuity and skill of Gujarātī bankers, weavers and ship-carpenters. "No other province in India" said Khafikhan (1719) "can equal this rich province." European travellers and Indian historians vie with one another in extolling the magnificence of Ahmedābād with its three hundred and eighty suburbs; each of them, according to Mirat-i-Ahmedi, (1756), was of 'considerable size, containing good buildings and markets filled with everything valuable and rare, so that each was almost a city.'

III

During this period men were being driven into progressively narrowing communities. Social barriers were stiffened; the individual was sacrificed to the group. Untouchability came into existence. Vimalaprabandha records the existence of numerous sub-castes. Every social group which acquired a new local habitation and name by migration remained a self-contained unit and exercised rigorous control over its members. Marriage between members of different castes was prohibited. Disintegration of the joint family which had commenced prior to the date of the law-text, Mitākshara, (XI century) was sternly resisted.

Wise men, poets and moralists were moved to righteous indignation at young wives who, desirous of having a good time with their husbands, drove them to disrupt the family, and, thereby, to destroy the protection which it afforded. No measures were too strong to restrain these centrifugal tendencies of women. They lost the high status which they once enjoyed in the family, and were generally treated as slaves. Co-education in village schools came to an end. Marriage of infants became almost universal. In Mārūdholācupātī, the hero, when three years old, was married to the heroine who was younger. Bhīma (1485) bewails the degeneracy of the age in which girls were mothers at eight, and widows at sixteen. Old men paid fancy price for infant wives. Marriage of a grown-up girl with an infant husband was by no means rare. An ill-assorted match was the rule. In Rūpacandakūnvara vāsa, Sohāga says :

Better kill me, mother, with your own hands; place, if you like, a black, venomous cobra on my body; let me suffer the fearful misery of hell; but, do not give me in marriage to a stupid man.

"In this world you never find one thing," runs a garabī "you never find a well-matched pair." The position of a girl in the house of her husband was insufferable. In a popular garabī, styled Kera Kānto, the Thorn, a young wife enumerates her father-in-law, mother-in-law etc., as thorns in her side.

Men were, as a rule, much married. Many a story leaves an unpleasant impression on the modern mind because of the light-heartedness with which the hero marries and supersedes wives. Dholā, when in search of his first wife, is willing to see the second dead and burned, and only because she loved him too well. Even a married woman was helpless. When her husband decides to start for a foreign land, Surasundarī says, "If you leave me behind, people will spread scandals about me." Dhanavati, under similar circumstances, is more emphatic.

No one will respect me even in my father's house. No one will ever pay me any attention. The world will call me a helpless woman. When her husband is with her, a woman can do what she likes. She can talk with dignity; she can treat every man with contempt. A woman, when her husband is away, is bereft of her senses; she is more dead than alive.

In the Gujarāta of the Cālukyās, remarriage of widows was not considered disreputable. But in the fifteenth century, Bhālāṇa bewailed their lot. 'Pious and charitable widows are treated like dirt. If they keep themselves tidy, they are suspected of immorality.' Early in the eighteenth century, Premānanda regards remarriage of widows as an abomination.

And society remained the same till the beginning of the twentieth century.

IV

But these social activities were not the result of decay, but of a purposive corporate effort to preserve life from destruction. Within their castes the people were happy. Vallabha in his bombastic style thus describes Gujarāta in 1704 :

I have seen many lands, wandered over the earth. I have gone beyond Attack to see wars. Some things are found in some places, and other things in others. But every sort of happiness is not to be found in these lands; you see something wanting. But, in virtuous Gujarāta, you see men and women equipped with food, drink, and wealth. One thing more. It has something unique : the great, the powerful among the fair, Love. Yet another one like her, nay a greater lady, Dayā (Compassion) lives here.....In this Gujarāta live the merciful, the generous, the honourable, the wealthy, and the learned. Go to any place in India yourself: You will never find the qualities for which Gujarāta is famous.¹

This description is too effusive, but the testimony of Veṅkaṭādhvarin of Telangāṇa, the author of a campū, Viśvagudādarśa (c. 1640) requires to be noted.

See this Gurjaradeśa, Viśvāvasu. Full of wealth and plenty, this land is another paradise. Its young men have their mouth full of fresh pāna, fragrant with camphor and sweet betel-nut. They put on fancy, bright-coloured dress, attracting admiration; they adorn themselves with shining ornaments of jewels. Their bodies are fragrant with sandal-scented paste. They seek pleasure in company with damsels beautiful as Rati.

The beauty of the young damsels of this land is incomparable. Their colour is molten gold; their lips are soft and red; their hands are delicate as sprouts; their speech is sweet as nectar; their face is lotus-like; their eyes

1. सर्वस्व ए सुख का'वे, ललुं कोक देशे कांक ;
तोय एक वातुं नथी, भूमिमां भले भगो.
नर अने नारी जुओ, गुणियल गूजराते,
खाना पाना धाना सर्व, वळी वधु एक छे.
छीलिंगमां जोराळी जे, महत्ववाळी छे माया,
अधिकी तेथी छे आ तो, साक्षीओ अनेक छे ;
तेवी के तेथी वधारे, दया दयिता छे वर,
अन्य स्थळ अल्प दीसे, अत्र छकी छेक छे ;

.

दयावान दानवान, मान पान धानवान,
विद्यावान हता गया, एवो गूजरात आ ;
भाळोने भरतखंड, भमी भमी भले जाते,
गूजरातकेरा गुण, वारू तो विख्यात आ !

have the lustre of dark lotus in them. What graces of these young Gujarātī damsels do not fascinate? ¹

The poet also refers to the wealth of Gujarāta.

The people visit different countries, observe their novelties, and also acquire measureless wealth. Then they return home, and meet their loyal wives, anxious to meet them, after a long period of separation. In this way, these blessed ones, rich with every possession, enjoy untold happiness. ²

The works of Premānanda, Vallabha and Sāmala corroborate Venkaṭādhvarin. Political power, effectively segregated, was being undermined. The land was rich, men contented, and life even. The Purāṇic order of things was accepted as eternal. Society, though subdivided, was self-contained; a sense of interdependence and service permeated all its strata. Social structure had lost freedom, but gained power of resistance. Āryan culture had thus triumphed in the hour of its apparent defeat.

V.

The Mussalman rulers were accepted by the people as part of their normal existence. Many of them were Hindu converts; their proselytizing zeal had abated; and their

1. स एष सर्वसंपदामास्पदतया त्रिदशालस्यादेश इव गुर्जरदेशश्चक्षुषोः सुखाकरोति ।

अत्रहि—

सकर्पूरस्वादुक्रमुकनववीटीरसलसन्

मुखाः सर्वश्लाघापदविधिदिव्यांबरधराः ।

कनकलाकल्पा धुमधुमितदेहाश्चक्षुसृणैर्

युवानो मोदन्ते युवतिभिरमी तुल्यरतिभिः

अत्र वधूनामप्यन्यादशं सौंदर्यम् ।

तप्तस्वर्णसवर्णमंगकमिदं ताम्रो मृदुश्चाधरः

पाणीप्राप्तनवप्रवालसरणी वाणी सुधाधोरणी ।

वक्त्रं वारिजमित्रमुत्पलहृलश्रीसूचने लोचने

के वा गुर्जरसुश्रुवामवयवा यूनां न मोहावहाः ॥

2. देशे देशे किमपि कुतुकादद्भुतं लोकमानाः

संपाद्यैव द्रविणममितं सद्म भूयोप्यवाप्य ।

संयुज्यन्ते सुचिरविरहोत्कण्ठिताभिः सतीभिः

सौख्यं धन्याः किमपि दधते सर्वसंपत्समृद्धाः ॥

self-interest linked them to a people who could replenish their treasury when required. Bhakti lost its vigour as a new impulse. By its very nature, its intensity could only be the privilege of the select, and the new Vaishṇavism and its voluptuous high-priests had given it a new shape. The heroism of a Kāhnaḍade or a Narasinha Mehtā had become a thing of the past.

Wealth and contentment without heroism stunted the ideals of life and produced resentment among the thoughtful. What was the use of this world, they asked, so stale, so unchanging, so sordid? Contemplation of the futility of life induced in them the morbid attitude of mind which characterized both the Jaina sādhu and the ascetic Vedāntin. In a classical poem, Śaṅkarācārya had expressed it centuries ago.

This life is fleeting, more transient than a drop of water on a lotus leaf. To be born, to die, and, again, to live in a mother's womb...In such a world, difficult to be crossed, nothing can save one except the grace of Murāri.

And, therefore, pleasures had to be eschewed and liberty destroyed. Men and women had to be made other-worldly; for, a death-like existence in this life was a necessary precursor of a happy existence after death. Woman was the gate of hell, the curse of creation, an encumbrance in this life, a hindrance to the next. To be a good man was to be a man dead to the joys of life. Thus this age evolved its gospel of living death. And it was preached by its literary exponents with irrepressible rancour.

VI

Akho or Akhā bhagata (c. 1615-1674) voiced this gospel. He was a goldsmith of Ahmedābād, originally from the neighbouring village of Jetalpura. For sometime he worked as the head of the royal mint. He lost his wife early, and also a sister whom he dearly loved. Forgetting the traditional dishonesty of the goldsmith, he secretly added his own gold in preparing an ornament for a lady whom he cherished as a sister. The lady would not believe that a goldsmith could so flagrantly depart from the recognised maxims of his trade, and had the ornament tested to find out the truth. When she found that he had spoken the truth, she went to thank him for his kindness. Akho, however, was shocked at the lady's suspicions, and came to hate a world so full of distrust and suspicion. In the meantime he was put into prison on a charge of committing defalcation. The charge, however, was not proved, and he was set free. Weary of life, he threw his implements into a well and went abroad seeking peace of mind.

He sought refuge in prayer, performed many rituals, but found no peace. He went to Gokula in the hope of obtaining spiritual assistance from the goswāmī, the head of the Vaishṇava sect.

There, I accepted Gokulnātha as my teacher; he passed a string through my nose.¹

He was feasted; he observed the festivities of the sect; but his spirit rose in revolt.

He (the goswāmī) had, no doubt, become a guru. But with a stone round his own neck, how can he keep himself afloat? He did not know Hari at all; he was merely posing as a teacher.²

At war with himself and the world, he went to Kāśī, where, hiding himself behind a wall, he heard the principles of Vedāntic philosophy expounded by a sanyāsin. The philosophy of Śaṅkarācārya gave him the solace he needed.

Akhā, now a complete believer in vairagya, non-attachment, gave up his wealth. On his return journey to Ahmedābād he went to see the goswāmī, his teacher. But the poor beggar who now sought admittance to the palace was not the rich Akhā who had brought presents. He was turned out. The goswāmī himself refused to recognise him. The poet sang:

He who can bring you to Rāma is the teacher. Others are like wolves; they rob you of your wealth, but cannot save you from the sins which cause rebirth.

He went home and studied the philosophic doctrines of Śaṅkara, and spent his life either in expounding them or lashing the world's hypocrisy in caustic verse. Late in life he was inspired to compose his works. He says, "I wept

1. गुरु कर्मा में गोकुलनाथ, गुरु मुजने घाली नाथ.

2. गुरु थई बेटो हौशे करी, कंठे पहाण, शके क्या तरी ?

पोते हरि नहीं जाणे लेख, काढी बेटो गुरुनो वेश.

for a long time; and once Hari appeared... Then the floodgates of my speech were opened."

And he decided not to wet his feet any more 'in the waters of the world.'

VII

His works, expounding the Advaita philosophy are: Akhegītā, Cittavicārasamvāda, Pancikarāṇa, Guruśiṣhyasamvāda, Anubhāvabindu, Kaivalyagītā and Paramapadaprabhāṭi in Gujarātī; and Pancadaśītatparyā and Brahmaṇī in Hindi. He has also composed about seven hundred chappās, or epigrammatic stanzas, on different aspects of life, and about sixty padas. Akhā's place in literature depends upon his chhapas and padas in which, following a line of early writers like Māṇḍana, he expressed the dominant note of the age in biting verse. In these small poems, he fights the accepted formulae of life, bitterly, brutally, making all kinds of ugly comparisons to bring his point home. But the fight is not for a vigorous and full life, but for an arid detachment. Akhā himself did not claim to be a poet but a jñānī, a student of philosophy. "If Akhā were to write poetry, he would stand disgraced."

Do not consider a jñānī a poet. How will you be able to describe the rays of the sun? ¹

He was, however, very poorly equipped for literary work. The words which he used were very often inappropriate. His knowledge of prosody, grammar and syntax was meagre. His meaning was often shrouded in obscurity. He treated Saṁskṛta with lofty contempt.

What is the use of speaking in Saṁskṛta? Nothing is lost by speaking in Prakṛta? ²

His attitude towards other poets was equally contemptuous.

Poets only make an empty noise to make themselves heard, like the thunders of the sky when the constellation, Rohiṇī, is in the ascendant. They only want to be worshipped; they join couplet to couplet, full of empty words. One is a poet; he composes much and yet does not think of Brahma; he only

1. જ્ઞાનીની કવિતા ન ગણીશ, કિરણ સૂર્યનાં કેમ વરણીશ.

2. સંસ્કૃત બોલે તે શું થયું, કાંઈ પ્રાકૃતમાંથી નાશી ગયું.

collects wealth by transacting business in love and hatred. What does he gain by it?¹

He has no faith in those who teach religious precepts.

They only bring up water from a deep well with a torn leather bucket.²...

A shallow man of learning is a quarrelsome woman whose conceit is pampered by the birth of a son; a vicious bull who has fattened himself by grazing in the rains; a mad dog attacked with rabies; a monkey drunk with wine.³...

Be your own teacher; worship the soul within.⁴

He hates religious forms.

He has spent fifty-three years in making religious marks on his body; his rosaries have been worn out; his feet are tired with wandering from one sacred place to another; yet he has not reached Hari.... Hearing religious recitals again and again, I have grown deaf; but the knowledge of Brahma has not come to Akhā.⁵

He holds up to ridicule men whose 'gods are as numerous as the stones they worship'.⁶

1. कवि ए शक्य जणावा काज, गाजे जेम रोहेणीनो गाज ;

.... ...

पूजावा मनमां बहु कोड, शद्वतणा जोडे छे जोड ;

... ...

कवि थइने अधिकुं शुं कव्युं, जोतां नहीं ब्रह्म अणचव्युं ;

रागद्वेषनी पूजी करी, कवि व्यापार बेठो आदरी ;

तेमां अखा शुं पामे लाभ.....

2. उंडो कूवो ने फाटी बोख, शिखव्युं सांभळ्युं सघणुं फोक.
 3. ओछुं पात्र ने अदकुं भप्यो, वढकणी बहुए दीकरो जप्यो.
 मारकणो सांढ चोमासुं महाल्यो, करडकणा कुतराने हडकवा हाल्यो ;
 मरकट ने वळी मदिरा पीए, अखा एथी सौ को बीहे.
 4. गुरु था तारो तुंज.....वाळ्य अंतरमां सेवा.
 5. तिलक करतां त्रेपन बह्यां, जपमाळानां नाकां गयां ;
 तीर्थ फरी फरी थाक्या चर्ण, तोय न पहाँता हरिने शर्ण ;
 कथा सुणी सुणी फूट्या कान, अखा तोय नाव्युं ब्रह्मज्ञान.

 6. एक मूर्खने एवी टेव, पत्थर एटला पूजे देव.

Opium and worldliness are alike to him who tastes them. The more he takes them, the more tasteful they appear. If he leaves them, he dies. If he takes to them, he is dead.¹

VIII

The poet's longer works are philosophical rather than literary. In spite of his arrogant refusal to call himself a poet and his obscure and ungrammatical style, Akhā's poetic flashes lighten his philosophical works, producing images of great vividness and beauty. In Anubhavabindu, he thus illustrates philosophic doctrines:

The waters of the sea spread in all directions. They spread on the earth; the vegetation grows luxuriantly. What of it is left rushes down the hills; and it bears the name of a river. People hold it sacred and bathe in it. It rolls on proudly. Akhā! No one sees its beginning. But Śrī Hari is as the sea, while life is but the river-flow. ...

The hot season passes away; the monsoon spreads in lovely colours. The lightening flashes; the gentle winds exhilarate the mind; the moon shines everywhere; all distress is quieted. In the same way, the delusions of the senses disappear before the refulgence of the Supreme Consciousness.²

In Akhegītā, he describes the manifestation of the Supreme Soul thus:

The moon floods the world with light; her rays spread over the forests,

1. एक अफीण बीजो संसारी रस, अधिक करे तेम आपे कस;
जेम जेम अधिकुं खातो जाय, अगे अकले हीणो थाय;
जो मूके तो मुवे सरे, नहीं तो अखा ते खातो मरे.

2. वारिधिकेरुं वारि, चार दिश मध्ये चाले;
पृथ्वी पर पथराय, वनराजी फूले फाले.
ऊगरतू रहे अंबु, सर्व ढली आवे ढाले;
ते नदी नाम धराय; न्हाय सहु, बहु महिमा लेहे.
गर्वभरी गाजे अखा! शरू न जुए सरिता सही.
जेम सागर, तेम श्रीहरी; वच्चे जीवनदी वही.

जेम जाय ऋतु जलद, शरद ऋतु रुडी दीसे
दामिनीदमक पलाय; वाय हलवे मन हीसे;
चहुदिश चमके चंद; थंद सहु मननू भागे;
तेम भागे भवभ्रांति कांति द्वितीयानी आगे.

glades and temple tops ; even so the Supreme Soul pervades the sense world, and penetrates into the recesses of the heart.¹

Akhā did not possess Narasinha's subjectivity, nor his glorious wings of passion. But his bhakti was not devoid of personal touch, a world-hater though he was. He describes a bhakta in Akhegītā :

He sings with the throb of tears in his voice ; his limbs are a-quiver. He sheds tears of joy. His heart is full ; he is inspired by love. While eating, drinking, and speaking, he sees Rāma. His mind is pervaded by Him. He is indifferent to his worldly duties. His heart is soft as butter, full of affection. His eyes are filled with ambrosia. He is but a field for the bhakti of Hari to grow. The mind of a young woman, engrossed in her lover, lives in him ; she sees him and none else all day and night. And so does the mind of a slave of Hari live with Him.²

He had philosophic insight ; his study of Vedānta was deep. But the poetic value of his works often lies in the Vedāntic conceptions and images in which, from the days of the Upanishads, the great Indian philosophers have embodied thought ; his real contribution has been to use them with great force and appropriateness in the language.

One more instance may be given of a felicitous use of Vedāntic images. He describes supreme bliss in Akhegītā thus :

What unknown bliss is mine to-day ? I comprehend the Incomprehensible ; I praise the Perfect Brahma, the Lord transcending the Lord of Māyā. He

1. उदय उजाळो दे जेम चंद्रमा जी,
किरण तेहनां पसरे वनवीथी मंद्रमां जी,
तेम सरखो आतम भासे कीट इन्द्रमां जी,
एहवो प्रगट्यो हृदयाकन्द्रमां जी.
2. गद्गद कंठे गाते थके रोमांचित होये गात्र,
हर्ष आंखु बहु हेत हृदय प्रेम करं ते पात्र;
खातो पीतो बोलतो देखतो ते सगळे राम,
वेधुं मन रहे तेहुं शिथिल संसारी काम.
नवनीत सरखुं हृदे कोमल कहुं न जाए हेत,
आंख मांहे अमृत भरियुं हरि भक्ति करं क्षेत्र;
ज्यम जार वळुंधी युवती तेनुं मन रहे प्रीतमपास,
आहर्निश रहे आलोचती भाइ एहवुं मन हरिदास.

rules Vishnu, Śiva and Brahmā.....The Living Essence shines from nothingness...He is indescribable, neither all-pervading nor atomic...when you know Him, all phenomena fade away. He stands revealed in reality; karma touches him not, nor time; He pervades all.¹

IX

Up to the beginning of the modern period, most of the poets echoed the note of Akhā,—a note which came out of a bitter heart, weary of the stagnant social and political conditions in Gujarāta. Neither art nor insight characterised their outlook on life. This class of cheerless literature consisted of monotonous padas on śṛṅgāra; on jñāna, describing the vanity of life; on vairāgya, praising other-worldliness and despising joys of life.

-
1. अभिनवो आनन्द आज अगोचर गोचर हवुं ए;
परपंचपार महाराज ते पूरण ब्रह्म स्तवुं ए.
हरिहर अज भुवनेश ते तणो ईश अजापति ए;

स्वे चैतन्यघनराय शून्यमां सोहामणो ए;
ते नाचे वाणी मांछ ते नहि विराट ने वामणो ए.

ए जाण्ये जाए जंजाल, यथारथ ज्यम त्यम थयुं ए;
जिहां कर्म न लागे काल, सभर भराइ ते रह्युं ए.
तिहां हवुं मन लेलीन, जइ चैतन्य सभर भर्युं ए;
नहि को दाता दीन, तन्मय सहजे सज थयुं ए.
प्रगट्यां कोटि कल्याण आपापर विणश्ये रह्युं ए;
सदा सदोदित भाण उदे अस्त कारण गयुं ए.
कहे अखो आनन्द अनुभवने लहेवा तणो ए;
एहवो पूरण परमानन्द नित्य सराहुं अति घणो ए.

CHAPTER VII

PREMĀNANDA

(1636-1734)

The literary consciousness of Gujarāta—Viśvanātha Jānī—Premānanda—His life—His works—His literary characteristics—His realistic art—His personal note—His philosophy of life—The ākhyāna in his hands—Okhāharāṇa (1667)—Abhimanyuākhyāna (1671)—Huṇḍī (1674)—Śrīrādhī (1681)—Māmeruṇī (1683)—Nalākhyāna (1685)—Raṇayajña (1685)—Ashfārakī ākhyāna (1710)—Sudāmācaritra (1682)—Daśamaskandha—The plays attributed to him—Vallabha (1704) Mitrādharmaākhyāna—Ratneśvara—Sāmalābhata (c. 1700)—His position in literature—His style and technique—His chappās.

By the beginning of the seventeenth century, Gujarāta, as a province of the Mogul Empire, had settled down to a sort of peaceful existence. A new literary tradition came into existence; and the form, the expression, and the technique for which the rāsa or ākhyāna stood, together with its frame work of Purāṇic episodes or popular fiction, were made a medium for a realistic treatment of life.

I

The exponents of this tradition found in the life of Narasinha Mehtā a new and fertile source of inspiration. Popular imagination had been busy surrounding him with miraculous achievements. About 1645 an unknown poet composed Hāramālā, celebrating the incident in which Kṛṣṇa gave the saint a garland in the court of Rā Māṇḍalika. Viśvanātha Jānī (1625-1675) was the first well-known poet to compose Moṣulīcaritra (1652) about another incident. Soon after, Kṛṣṇadāsa composed a Hāracaritra (1655) and Huṇḍī (1657). In 1678 Premānanda edited, and in part re-wrote, Hāramālā, and set about composing brilliant works on the well-known incidents in Narasinha's life.¹

II

Premānanda, son of Kṛṣṇa of Baroda, was the greatest literary figure of the age. A Brāhmaṇa by caste, he was

1. Ante p. 139; Munshi, Narsaiyo: Bhakta Harinō, Introduction (Guj.) pp. 36, 47, 51, left an orphan in his infancy, and taken for an idiot. In the company of a sanyāsin, Rāmacaraṇa, he toured North India, studying Saṁskṛta and Hindi then the language of culture. At first, Premānanda wrote in Hindi, but his guru disapproved of his efforts. "Why neglect your door-steps and go in search of a distant mountain?" Accepting the advice, he restricted his literary activities to his mother tongue.

PREMĀNANDA

He began his career as a gāgariā bhāṭa in Surat, then the richest port in the Mogul Empire. He at once gained popularity, and was in demand at Baroda, Nandurabāra, and Khāndeśa. The young poet was diffident. He says, "I beseech the poets not to find fault with my works." But, before long, he acquired courage and confidence.

Purāṇikas were very costly; I felt anxious about it. So I decided to show to the people the difficult path to heaven, and made this aerial car of Prākṛta.

He made good money, and spent it generously in the orthodox style, feasting the Brāhmanas. His son says, "He caused a river of ghee to flow, and God himself built the banks of sugar."

Naturally, few details of his life have come down to us. His was a prosperous and uneventful life solely dedicated to literature. He died at the ripe old age of ninety-eight. He left fifty-two disciples, twelve of whom were women, devoted to the cause of literature. On his death-bed he is said to have given directions that, out of his disciples, his son, Vallabha, should write in the style of Hindi poets, Ratneśvara in the style of Marāṭhī poets, Virjī in that of Persian poets, and Sundara in the style of the Purāṇas.

III

The works of Premānanda were very popular, and kept alive the traditions and maintained the atmosphere of the Purāṇas in the province. Thirty years ago, there was scarcely a middle-aged lady of the higher class in Gujarāta who did not know at least one of them by heart.

Premānanda composed with incredible facility. As many as fifty-seven works are attributed to him, several of them being of considerable length. His work can be divided, according to their sources, into the following groups:

(1) Ākhyānas from the Mahābhārata: Candrahāsākhyāna (1671), R̥shyaśyṅgākhyāna (1673), Draupadivayamvara

(1680), Māndhātākhyāna (1681), Bhagavadgītā (1682), Nalākhyāna (1685), Draupadiharāṇa (1689), Subhadrāharāṇa (1702) and Ashṭāvakraṅkhyāna (1710).

(2) Ākhyānas from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa : Lakshmaṇaharaṇa (1664), Oḅhāharāṇa (1667), Sudāmācaritra (1682), Vāmanacaritra (c. 1729), Dāṇa-līlā, Saptama-skandha, Rukmiṇīharāṇa and Dhruvākhyāna.

(3) Ākhyānas from the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa : Madalaśākhyāna (1672), Hariścandraākhyāna (1692), and Devīcaritra (1695).

(4) Ākhyānas from the Rāmāyaṇa : e. g. Raṇayajna (1685).

(5) Complete versions of the Mahābhārata, the Bhāgavata, the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa and the Rāmāyaṇa.

(6) Ākhyānas on the life of Narasiṅha Mehtā : Hundī (c. 1674), Hāramālā (c. 1678), Śrīddha (1681) and Māmeruṇ (1683).

(7) Miscellaneous works, like Svarganīsarāṇī, Vivekavaṇazāro and Bhramara-paciśī.

Many parts of these works have been bodily taken from the works of Viṣṇudāsa, Nākara, Viśvānātha Jānī and other less known of his predecessors. A prince of plagiarists, Premānanda allowed no law, either of morals or art, to prevent him from appropriating another man's work. By the very conditions of his profession, he was required to use his poetic skill upon the ākhyānas well-known to his audience. And his works, in consequence, exhibit widely differing standards of skill and language. For instance, the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa follows the original closely; the rendering of the Bhāgavata, except in parts, has little literary value; while Nalākhyāna, though largely based on a predecessor's work, is an independent work of art, every line of which testifies to the touch of a skilled artist.

IV.

Premānanda was very proud of the Gujarātī language, and had pledged himself to make it as rich and beautiful as Saṁskṛta. He is said to have given up wearing a turban till he redeemed the pledge. In Roshadarśikā-satyabhāmākhyāna, a drama attributed to him, he says :

May the Gujarāṭī language be rich with implied meanings, lovely in its parts. May her feet be full of grace and ornament. May she excel all her comrades. May she reach the pedestal occupied by the language of gods (Saṁskṛta). May God fulfil my hope of seeing her the best among all her friends! ¹

His command over the resources of the language was unequalled; and, so was his knowledge of contemporary life. He was a profound observer; no detail escaped him. He depicted passion, situation and character in a vivid style. He was a master of the art of gaining broad effects; and could play upon an emotion to the point of saturation. He excelled in making an old plot, however jejune, throb with new life. Among the literary artists of the period, he alone was truly a creative artist, and could give a glimpse of actual life.

A clever reader of the popular mind, he was always ready to cater to the prevailing taste. This was his strength and his weakness. In his hands, the dignity of the Purāṇic characters suffered lamentably. The mighty and astute Śrī Kṛṣṇa was painted in the Abhimanyu-ākhyāna as a base trickster. The incident of King Yuvānaśva bearing a child was described in the Māndhātā-ākhyāna with a wealth of intimate details revealing lack of good taste and artistic perception. His audience must have enjoyed a recital of those passages; but, to-day, they scarcely help to justify his literary reputation.

It is difficult to find even an isolated note of personal feeling in his works. He wore a literary mask, and identified himself with every situation.

The works dealing with bhakti show Premānanda only as an artist; he can describe the storm of love without betraying subjective intensity. His works, no doubt, display greater variety of treatment and a more comprehensive effort to enrich emotions than the work of Narasiṅha; but the great impulse of pure bhakti does not inspire them, nor does a high conception of beauty. ²

-
1. सांगोपांग सुरंग व्यंग अतिशे, धारो गिरा गुजरी,
पादे पाद रसाळ भूषणवती, थाओ सखी उपरी ।
जे गीर्वाण गिरा गणाय गणतां, ते स्थान ए ल्यो वरी,
थाये श्रेष्ठ सहु सखीजनथकी, ए आश पुरो हरि ॥

His horizon was limited by the narrow world in which the small castes of Gujarāta had their being. Satisfied with himself and his times, he considered everything to be for the best in this best of all possible worlds wherein men were ruled by the Purāṇic order of things. In S. Y. 1729 (A. C. 1673) famine swept over Gujarāta; and the poet composed Rshyaśrngākhyāna with this note:

It was a terrible calamity; the only good fortune was that it was not the end of the world; even suckling babies tremble when they hear of the famine of twenty-nine. In that year, twenty-nine, I composed this work; I could not repress my nature. I am only happy when I compose a poem.

This sanity of outlook was in remarkable contrast to the other-worldly note of contemporary literature.

Premānanda took the old rāsa form of the ākhyāna as he found it—a long, poetic composition divided into kaḍavāṇs in deśi and rounded by two lines of valaṇa. But he used it with freedom and vigour. In his best works, the story was a rapid and interesting narrative; but he broke it up at frequent intervals to make room for long descriptions instinct with real life, or padas or garabīs infused with feeling, homely but rich. He used his art so skilfully that the ākhyāna became, like the modern novel, an elastic-medium for all literary purposes.

V.

In Okhāharāṇa, the poet describes the feelings of a Gujarātī girl on seeing her husband's father. Okhā, daughter of the demon Bāṇāsura, is locked up in a tower with a companion, Citralekhā. She meets Aniruddha in a dream and falls in love with him. In the morning, she requests Citralekhā to draw portraits of well-known men that she might identify her lover. Citralekhā tries her hand at drawing various celebrities, but Okhā is unmoved. Citralekhā ultimately draws Kṛṣṇa.

When she saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Okhā stood up out of respect, covering her face with the fold of her sārī. She recognised her grand-father-in-law. She said, "My husband is surely descended from this man".

Then Citralekhā drew Pradyumna, and Okhā covered her face again. She said, "His limbs are those of my lord, not his age".

Citrlekḥā, then, drew Aniruddha on paper. He had a coronet on his brow; his face was like the moon; his eyes, like lotuses. Agitated, Okhā rushed to embrace the paper. "Come, My Lord, come," she cried, "You have accepted me ; why do you forsake me now ? A woman's heart is soft ; how can I bear it ? Speak, I pray, speak to me. Why don't you ?"

Citralekṣhā said, "This is not your husband. You will tear the paper, if you hold it like this."

The marriage of Okhā with Aniruddha, described in detail, is solemnised in typical Gujarātī style. Bānāsura's wife welcomes the bridegroom and his party ; the dinner is given with éclat ; drums resound with joy ; women sing festive songs ; and the marriage knot is tied.

Abhimanyu-ākhyāna describes the exploits of Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna by Kṛṣṇa's sister, Subhadrā. Inspired by revenge, Ahilocana, son of the demon Mayadānava, comes to Dvārikā with a magic trunk, in which he proposes to smother his father's murderer, Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa assumes the form of Śukrācārya, the high priest of the princely demons. But the description given by the poet is not of the venerable Śukrācārya of the Purāṇas.

He appeared an old man. He had a stick in his hand and yet he stumbled at every step. A torn piece of cloth was folded round his head. Shaking with palsy, with mouth and nose dribbling, he looked from side to side with watery eyes. His body was shrunken, weak as a twig ; as he coughed, he was out of breath. He, the Eternal,—coughed loudly like a consumptive man. His feet shook under him ; sometimes, he fell to the ground. Hunch-backed he was, and doubled at the waist. His feet were rheumatic ; his hair white ; his knees bent. He walked with a limp....When he spoke, his tongue came in the way. He had

1. દીઠા શ્રીકૃષ્ણ ને ઓઘા ડઠી, કીધી વડસસરાની લાજ;
અરે સહિયર ! એ મિયાના રે કુઢમાં, છે મારો ભરથાર.
તવ પ્રયુમ્નને લઘ્વી દેઘાડયો, લાજ કીધી વીજી વાર;
કન્યા કહે અવયવ પ્રભુના, આ પુરુષ કોઈ વૃદ્ધ.
ચિત્રલેઘાએ લઘ્વી દેઘાડયો, કાગઢમાં અનિરુદ્ધ,
મુગટ ધ્રમરપર વદન સુધાકર, નેત્ર બે અંબૂજ;
ઘેલી ઓઘા ઘાઙ્ગને મેટી, કાગઢને ભરી મૂજ.
ઘન્ય ઘન્ય નાથજી ! હાથ ગ્રહીને, ન મૂકીએ તે વીડી સારું;
હૃદય અબઢાનું હોય કાચું, કુળ ગજૂં છે મારું ?
ના, ના, બોલો મારા સમ છે, લાજો છો શા માટે ?
ચિત્રલેહા કહે ન હોય સ્વામી, વઢ્યામાં કાગઢ ફાટે.

spasms. Dressed in a forester's garb, he had thrown a blanket over his shoulders.¹

This description of a poor, old, diseased village priest is graphic, though a little too colourful.

On the pretext of measuring the trunk, Kṛṣṇa induces Ahilocana to get into it, and shuts down the lid. The demon is suffocated to death. Kṛṣṇa entrusts the box to his sister, Subhadṛā. The wives of Kṛṣṇa, burning with curiosity, prevail upon Subhadṛā to open the box. Feminine curiosity is, then, picturesquely described by the poet. The box is opened, the spirit of Ahilocana enters Subhadṛā, and Abhimanyu is born.

VI

In the contemporary setting of Navasinha Mehtāni Hunḍī the poet is not put to the strain of having to devise situations congenial to his art as in the Purāṇic ākhyānas, and is more successful. The Mehtā drew a hunḍī on Kṛṣṇa at Dvārikā in favour of some pilgrims.

The Beloved met the pilgrims on the banks of the Gomati. He had a fitting appearance. He walked as men do in the market. His turban was of twisted folds. Where did he learn to fold it so? With a pen behind his ear, he looked like a vanika....Like a bania, the Lord spoke hurriedly and with a lisp. A necklace of gold was round his neck; a broad belt of gold round his waist. His palm had the lines of wealth. He had rings on his fingers, a scarf over his shoulders. The Lord was large of build.²

1. वृद्ध वेश कर ग्रही लाकडी, वागे ठेस पडे आखडी.
जलजलं नेत्र जुवे अरुपरं, माथे बांध्युं फाटुं चीथरं;
थरथर देहडी धुजे जदुराय, कायामां प्रगटयो कंप वाय.
मुख नासिकाये लाळो चूवे, कर कपाळे दई आडुं जूवे;
पेटे वळी छे करचली, दीनबंधु दुवळा जाणे पेपली.
उधरसनो ठांसो ने चढे श्वास, खई रोगिया थया अविनाश;
खों खों खों खुंखारो करे, भोम पडे ने पग लडथडे.
नीसरी खुंध कटी बेवड वळी, पगे वायु ने माथे पळी;
खोडांगतो चाले कानुवो, बांकुं छुंण पगे जानुवो.
वळगे जीभ बोलतां आवे शूळ, ओढयो कामळो पहेर्युं वनकूळ;
एवे रुपे परमेश्वर पळ्या, अहिलोचनने सामा मळ्या.
2. वहालो गोमतीजीना घाटमां रे, मळ्यो तीरथवासीने वाटमां रे;
वेश पुरो आप्णो मारे वहाले रे, नाथ चउटानी चाले चाले रे.

In Śraddha, the Mehtā invites his caste-men to dinner on the anniversary of his father's death. His wife sends him to the market to buy ghee; but the saint, oblivious of his mission, joins some one in singing the praises of Kṛṣṇa. The guests arrive, but dinner is not ready. Māṇekabāi, Narasinha's wife, is unhappy, and the guests disappointed and sarcastic. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, however, assumes the Mehtā's form, brings ghee, and the feast is held.

In Māmeruṇ, wherein the poet narrates how Kṛṣṇa helped the Mehtā to celebrate the moṣālā of Kunvarbāi, the journey of the saint to the village of her husband is described in detail. Too poor to hire a cart, the saint improvises a vehicle.

The body of the cart was old; the yoke was bent, the poles broken. The wooden nails belonged to another; the bullocks were borrowed. A sack containing musical instruments, a bag of the sacred white clay, and another of tulsi wood were tied behind the cart. The scraggy bullocks would not move, and the Vaiṣṇavas had to push them forwards. When going uphill they did it, shouting, "Victory, Victory," all the time. Sometimes, one of the bullocks, too tired to move, would lie down on the road, and the other alone would drag the vehicle. They would then force the first one to rise by pulling its tail. A thousand such incidents would happen. . . Every joint of the cart was loose, the axle creaked, the wheels grated. They got in and out of the vehicle with the names of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa on their lips. In this manner, Mehtāji came to Unā at midday, and the village turned out to see him.¹

छे अवळा आंटानी पाघडी रे, वालाजीने केम बांधतां आवडी रे ?
दीसे वाणीओ भीने वान रे, एक लेखण खोसी छे कान रे.

त्रिकमजी वणिक्नी तोले रे, नाथ उतावळुं ने वोवळुं बोले रे;
सोनानी सांकळी ने कंठे दोरो रे, केडे पाटीवाळो कंदोरो रे.
झळके धनरेखा हथेलीमां रे, आंगळीए वींटो ने वेढीआं रे;
एक ओढी पछेडी खांधे रे, नाथ हुंढालो ने मोटी फांदे रे.

1. जुनी वेल ने धूसरि वांकी, सांगी सोटा भागीजी;
कोना तळाया ने कोनी पिंजणियो, वळद आप्या वे मागीजी.
महेतोजी मामेरे चाल्या, समर्या श्री जगदीशजी;
त्रण सखियो संघाते चाली, वेरागी दश वीशजी.
संपुट त्रांबानी डावलीनो, तेमां बाळमुकुंदजी;
कंठे हार करीने राख्या, दामोदर नंदनंदजी.
बलनी पूठे कोथळो बांध्यो, मांही भर्या वाजित्रजी.

VII

Nalākhyāna is perhaps the most popular of the poet's ākhyānas. This poem is characterized by ornate style, elaborate descriptions, and intensely expressed emotions. It is evidently an attempt to produce a masterpiece on the conventional model. The description of Damayanti is in the approved hyperbolic style of the period.

The serpent saw the lovely braid of Damayanti, and, humbled and ashamed, crawled into the nether regions. The moon saw the sweet face of Bhīmaka's daughter, waned, and hid behind a cloud. At creation, Brahmā collected light in a pot, and made the limbs of Damayanti out of it. Part of it lay unused; parts lay scattered about; Brahmā put them together and created the moon.¹

King Nala wants to marry her; but not even the sage Nārada will carry his message to her, lest his ascetic mind should lose self-control in her presence.

When on a visit to a forest the king catches a beautiful swan with a golden body. The bird thus expresses its feelings towards the captor :

गांठडी एक गोपीचंदननी, तुळशी काष्ठ पवित्रजी
 मोसाळानी सामग्रीमां, तिलक ने तुळसीमाळजी;
 नरसैयाने निर्भय छे जे, भोगवशे गोपाळजी.
 बळ हीण बळदो शुं हींङे, ठेले वैष्णव साथजी;
 सोर पाडे ने ढाळ चढावे, जे जे वैकुण्ठ नाथजी.
 एक बळद् गळियो थई बेसे, आखलो ताणी जायजी;
 पड्याने पुंछ ग्रही उठाडे, कौतुक कोटी थायजी.
 साले साल जूजवां दीसे, रथतणां बहु वक्रजी;
 सांगीनो बहु शब्दज उठे, चूचवे छे बहु चक्रजी.
 चडे बेसे ने वळि उतरे, ले रामकृष्णनुं नामजी;
 मय्याह महेंताजी आव्या, जोवा मळ्युं उंना गामजी.

1 दमयंतीनो चोटलो, देखी अति सोहाग;

अभिमान मूकी लज्जा आणी, पाताळ पेटो नाग.
 भीमक सुतां वदन सुधाकर, देखीने शोभाय;
 चंद्रमा तो क्षीण पामी, आभमां संताय.
 सृष्टि करतां ब्रह्माजीए, भयुं तेजनुं पात्र;
 ते तेजनुं प्रजापतिये घड्युं, दमयंतीनुं गात्र.
 तेमांथी काई शेष वाय्युं, घडतां खेरो पडियो;
 ब्रह्माए एकहुं करीने, तेनो चंद्रमा घडियो.

Sinful man ? For what sins of mine, do you visit me with this punishment ? Alas, man is cruel. He will kill me forthwith ; tear off my wings ; roast me on fire. Who will save me from him ? In order that he may eat, I must die, a jewel like me must be destroyed. My mate, disconsolate, must also die. On whom will she now rely ? ¹

The king, moved by compassion, lets go the bird ; and, in return, it flies to Damayanti and inspires her with a tender feeling for Nala. When Bhīmaka holds a svayamvara for his daughter, Nala and other kings, and even gods attend. Inspired by jealousy, the gods, including Indra, Varuṇa and Dharma, transform one another's face into that of a dog, a cat, a monkey or a bear. This touch of vulgarity scarcely meets the requirements of art, but, for the poet, Purāṇic personages were only pegs to hang contemporary pictures from. Damayanti selects Nala, is married to him, and returns with him to his capital.

On one occasion, Nala plays dice with his brother, and loses the stake ; and, in consequence, he has to give up his throne and go to a forest for three years. Damayanti bids a touching farewell to her children when she loyally follows Nala to the forest. Misfortunes befall the pair as they wander through the forests. Kali, the spirit of the Iron Age, instigates Nala to desert Damayanti while she is lying asleep in the forest. She wanders in the forest, alone and terrified, calling upon Nala in piteous wails. She is partly swallowed by a python, and narrowly escapes death.

These parts of the poem, already worked upon by so many poets, bear testimony to the poet's mastery in dealing with tragic situations. But in case of Old Gujarātī works, estimates can be only comparative ; though a masterpiece among the ākhyānas of the period, Nalākhyāna is but a crude vulgarisation of the noble original in the Mahābhārata.

-
- 1 ओ काळा माथाना धणी, पापी माणसा रे, जेने निर्दयता होये घणी, पा. ॥
 ए तो जीवने मारे ततखेव, पा. हवे हुं मुओ अवश्यमेव, पा. ॥
 हुंपी नाखशे माहारी पंखाय, पा. मुने शेकशे अग्निमांय, पा. ॥
 कोण मूकावे करी पक्ष, पा. माहारे मरवुं ने एने भक्ष, पा. ॥
 आ मज सरखुं रतन, पा. ते एळे थाशे नीधन, पा. ॥
 दळवळी मरशे माहारी नार, पा. ते जीवशे केने आधार, पा. ॥

Raṇayajña describes the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, and incidentally shows the poet's skill in dealing with vīra rasa, the heroic sentiment. But it is extravagant and tawdry, and lacks the epic thrill of Kāhmaṇḍadeprabandha.

A crowd of demons rushed determined to fight. Noses and ears and feet were scattered on the ground. Rivers of blood met. Some cried out; others shouted encouragement. Some roared; others were beaten with fists; some were stifled; some were masticated to death. Here and there and everywhere, royal umbrellas were lying about and armour plates and chains lay broken.¹

Queen Mandodarī, while remonstrating with Rāvaṇa, describes the ominous signs which prophesy disaster.

Oh, king, the day is dusty and overclouded. The sun is dim; my lord, the quarters are foggy. Evil omens meet us everywhere. Yester-night, I had a dream. King, how can I tell you how terrible it was? The sea was dried up; the river ran with blood; Lankā was in flames. Your queens were in tears; and so were your daughters and daughters-in-law. And I saw them tonsured, their hands without bracelets.²

But the king is adamant; he is determined to fight Rāma. Even Rāvaṇa's fierce brother, Kumbhakarna, makes a piteous but vain appeal to his brother to desist from fighting.

1. राक्षस जुय आवे त्याहां अति अडिया;
नासाकर्ण ने चर्ण बहू धर्ण ठळियां,
महा रुधिरनी सरिता नीर मळियां.
हकारे बकारे कोई त्यां खोखारे,
पोकारे होकारे नारे खड्ग धारे;
पगे झीक पडे डीक हैये हीक आवे,
आणे अंत वळवत ग्रही दंत चावे.
यत्र तत्र सर्वत्र बहु छत्र पडियां,
पाखर वख्तर कवचनी त्रूटी कडियां.
2. आजनो दाहाडो लागे धुंधळो, दीसे झांखो दिनकर देव, हो राणाजी;
त्रिभुवननाथ ना दुभीए, जेनी ब्रह्मा शंकर करे सेव, हो राणाजी. आ.
दिशा चारे दीसे धुंधळी, कांई शुक्ल माटेरां थाय, हो राणाजी;
कांई फाळ चोले रे विहामणी, रुप वायस श्वान ने गाय, हो राणाजी. आ.
गई राते स्वप्न में पामियुं, दीहुं दारुण कहुं क्यम जाय, हो राणाजी;
समुद्र सुका रुधिर सरिताभरी, लंकामां लागी छे लाय, हो राणाजी. आ.
लाख लाख राणी तमारडी, बीजो वहुबेटीनो साथ, हो राणाजी;
केश विना दीठी मस्तक बोडलां, चुडला विना दीठा हाथ, हो राणाजी. आ.

The poet, however, must make even the demon a little attractive. Rāvaṇa replies :

Hear my sorry tale. When I see Jānakī, I see in her as it were our mother. My love for her will only be destroyed with my corpse.

At the end, Rāvaṇa develops a sanctimonious disposition, confessing that he is only seeking liberation through death at the hands of Rāma.

VIII

Ashṭāvakraṅghyāna, written in somewhat polished style, contains excellent verses. The sage, stricken by love, wanders in a forest in the company of his wife.

The breeze blew softly. A pair of peacocks uttered notes of delight. Inspired by love, they moved about like a sārasa pair. They did not part from each other, in talk, in food, or in enjoyment. . . Their love grew, as the lady sang to her lord. On the way, the wind blew, sweet and mild, cool and fragrant; the youthful bride looked at the full-blown lotus with an anxious heart.¹

Sudāmācaritra exhibits great realism. Sent by his wives to seek help from Kṛṣṇa, his friend when in school, Sudāmā, the poor Brāhmaṇa, arrives at the palace. Kṛṣṇa rushes forward to welcome Sudāmā, and his wives bring gifts as a ceremonial welcome. The old friends meet, and touchingly exchange reminiscences of their boyhood. Sudāmā presents Kṛṣṇa with a little rice; and the present is returned by Śrī Kṛṣṇa a millionfold without his knowing it. When the poor Brāhmaṇa returns to his cottage, he finds in place of it a royal palace with elephants waiting at the door. Struck dumb with amazement, he does not

-
1. त्यां वायु मंदगतिं करे अति, द्वंद्व बोले मोरनां,
 सारस समां बे संचरे छे, कामदेवना जोरमां.
 विखुटां पडे नहि वातमां ते, हारमां विहारमां,
 विखुटां पडे नहि वातमां ते, सारमां असारमां.
 विखुटां पडे नहि वातमां ते, पारमां अपारमां,
 विखुटां पडे नहि वातमां ते, भारमां नभारमां.
 रे विखुटांज पाडे काळ भूलवे, धार निराधारमां,
 वितनु वाय्यो स्वर अलापे, भासिनी भरथारमां.
 शो मधुर मंद सुगंधि शीतळ, वायु वाहे वाटमां,
 खील्यां कमळ जोई रही जुवती, खरेखरा उचाटमां.

know what to do. Beauteous damsels accompany his wife, now transformed into a young, fascinating woman, as she comes out to welcome him. Then follows a humorous situation.

When worshipping him, she touched his hand, the sage ran away, frightened. He trembled in every limb; he could not see anything. He was bare-headed; his hair was flying about. When the beautiful lady tried to hold his hand, the sage shrieked, "I have got into a new house. Forgive me, I have no dishonest motive. I am old, and you are a young woman. My morals are very strict; I assure you, I have not come here lured by passion. Let me go. Why do you worry me? Be you happy?"¹

His wife explains how everything has been metamorphosed by the goodwill of Kṛṣṇa; and, as he enters the house, Sudāmā himself is transformed into a radiant youth.

His Daśamaskandha, Xth canto of the Bhāgavata, is a comparatively inferior work. The well-known lament of Jasodā, when Kṛṣṇa plunged into the Jumnā to recover a ball, is one of the finest poems of the author.

Why, my dark one, did you plunge into the river, leaving your poor mother behind?

The waters of the Jumnā are dark; the black Kālī lives in it. How can I hope to meet you again? How will you come back to me?

My child was my life, but fate has robbed me of it. I did not know how to preserve my jewel; and it is now lost to me. When well advanced in life, I had a son; I nursed him; I brought him up. But the sweetness which I had gathered is now gone. Bereaved, I am on fire.

When will I see you—a pearl in your nose, anklets on your feet, the peacock crown on your head,—coming back to me with the returning cattle? You have flung yourself into the deep waters; how will you live? Who will now play with your peacock, your parrot, and your doll?

You are gone, and I am alive; our love was destined to be short-lived. How shall I face the world? Yes, the ball was just an excuse; really, you must have been offended with me. When you were an infant, I once bound you to

-
1. પૂજા કરીને પાલવ ગ્રહ્યો, તવ ઋષિજી નાઠા જાય.
થર થર ધ્રુજે ને કાંઈ ન સૂજે, છૂટી જટા ડહાડે શીશ;
હસ્ત ગ્રહેવા જાય સુંદરી, તવ ઋષિજી પાડે નીશ.
હું તો સેજે જોડું છું ઘર નવાં, મને નથી કપટ વિચાર;
હું તો વૃદ્ધ ને તમો જોબન નારી, છે કઠળ લોકાચાર.
મોગાસક્ત હું નથી આવ્યો, મને પરમેશ્વરની આળ;
જાવા થો મને કાં દમો છો, તમને હજો કલ્યાણ,

the mortar. Did you plunge into the river because you remembered the insult ?¹

IX

Premānanda has been credited with writing dramas, three of which were published years ago. They are named Roshadarśikā-satyabhāmākhyāna, Pāñcālī-prasan-nākhyāna and Tapatyākhyāna. From a literary and artistic point of view, they are inferior to the poet's other works.

1. मारुं माणकडुं रीसाव्युंरे, सामळीया,
तारा मनमां ए शुं आव्युंरे, सामळीया;
हुं अपराधण माताने मूकी, शा माटे झंपाव्युंरे, सामळीया-मा०
कालिंदीनुं काळुं पाणी, मांहे वसे काळो काळी;
हवे आशा ते शी मळवानी, केम आवे वनमाळीरे, सा०-मा०
संतान रूपीयुं मोडुं धन ते, करमे लीधुं छंटी;
में नव जाण्युं जतन करीने, रतन पड्युं केम छूटीरे, सा०-मा०
पुत्र पामी हुं छेले आश्रमे, उछेयीं प्रतिपाळी;
नीपनो रस ढळी गयो हुं, वीजोग आगे वाळीरे, सा०-मा०
नाके मोती पाये घूघरी, मोर मुगट शिर धारी;
फरी रूप हुं क्यांथी देखुं, हरि आवे गौ चारीरे, सा०-मा०
काने कुंडळ मूखमां मोरली, सांजे गोकुळ आवो;
भूख्यो छौ कही पेट देखाडो, मा कही मने बोलावोरे, सा०-मा०
पीत पीछोडी काछ कछे, मुज कने नेतरुं मागे;
हुं घरडी माने थाकी जाणी, कोण बलोववा लागे रे, सा०-मा०
तुं प्राणेश्वर तुं गोपेश्वर, गोपी देह केम धरशे;
बाळ सखानी कोण वले आ, गायो हींसी हींसी मरशेरे, सा०-मा०
उंडा जळमां वासो कीधो, पाणीमां केम गमशे;
मोर पोपट पूतळी तारे, रमकडे कोण रमशेरे, सा०-मा०
कांइ तुं गयो ने हुं जीतुं छुं, ओछा सगपण माटे;
साचुं बहाल तो त्यां जणाये, सांभळतां हैडुं फाटेरे, सा०-मा०
काष्टे पाषाण कठीण छे, तेपे कठीण छे लोडुं;
वज्र तुल्य छे काळजुं मारुं, लोकने शुं देखाडुं मोडुंरे, सा०-मा०
तें मखांतर दडानुं कीधुं, मनमां दुःख कांइ आव्युं;
उखळनुं बंधन आज सांभर्युं, ते माटे झंपाव्युंरे, सा०-मा०
नंद यसोदा गाय गोवाळा; व्याकुळ वृजनी नारी;
चार घडी पूठे सर्व पडजो, हळथर राखे बारीरे, सा०-मा०

The technique is by a different hand. Their genuineness has been rightly challenged by Narsinhrao Divatia in an ably written paper, Premānandanā Nā'ako.¹ His arguments, which have remained unanswered, are that both stage and dramatic literature were unknown to Gujarāta in the whole period of five centuries; that Vallabha in his boastful recital of his father's literary achievements does not refer to any drama; that the original manuscripts have not been forthcoming in spite of repeated demands; and, that many phrases are based on idioms and ideas formed by Western influence. Further, a lapse of over fifty years has not led to the discovery of any other manuscript of the poet's dramas, or, for that matter, of any drama composed in Old Gujarātī. Old Gujarātī had no drama; and to the literary men of Gujarāta, from Somasundara to Dayārāma, the dramatic presentation of character, incident and dialogue was an unknown art.

X

Premānanda left two sons Vallabha and Jivaṇarām. Vallabha is said to have composed, among other works, Dukṣāsana-rudhīrapānākhyāna (1724); Yakṣhapraśnottara (1725); Kuntīprasannākhyāna (1781); Kṛṣṇavishṭi; Premānandakathā; Yudhisṭhīravṛkodara-ākhyāna; and a social story, Mitrādharmākhyāna (1754). Some of these works are of more than doubtful authenticity.

Vallabha appears to have been engaged in defending his and his father's position as a poet against Sāmaḷa. He was impetuous and arrogant, a fanatical worshipper of his father and a jealous guardian of his reputation.

The poetry of Premānanda is like the sun. The bards are but descended from the Brāhmaṇas; but a Brāhmaṇa is the descendant of Brahmā himself. Canda is inferior to the father of this lord of poets (meaning himself).²

Again,

There is nothing on earth equal to the Gujarātī language. It has all good qualities including mellifluity.

1. Sahitya Parishad Report, Vol. III.

2. પ્રેમાનંદની કવિતા, સવિતાશી પેલિયે.

બ્રાહ્મણથી ભાટ થયા, વંશજ વિધિના આ તો,
કર્વાશ્વરના પિતાથી, ચંદ મંદ દેહીય.

Except some happy descriptions and passages depicting impetuous wrath, there is very little in the works of this poet which deserves any serious attention. His style is extravagant and bombastic, and lacks refinement.

The credit of writing, perhaps, the only original social kathā of the age, Mitrādharmākhyāna, belongs to Vallabha. The subject of the poem is friendship and opens with a reference to persons whose friendship was known to the Purāṇas. Then follows one of the characteristic flourishes of the poet.

Duryodhana's friend was Karṇa, though he courted disaster. Premānanda is the friend of his foes; and Mādhava (the god?) is his friend. All men are friends of Vallabha; a friend is a soul of the body.

Then he describes Gujarāta, and has a hit at Sāmaḷa.

In the city of Ratnapura, dwelt great poets, some like Prema, some like us. Some poets who live there are of dark deeds (Sāma lakṣaṇavanta)¹ who serve all and sundry; who disregard the vow of non-begging and take to the ways of mendicants; who try to become gods but without proper ceremonies; who forgetting the duties of a Brāhmaṇa disgrace Gujarāta by their residence.

Indu and Mindu are the sons of two Brāhmaṇa friends in Ratnapurī. For twelve years they live in the āśrama of a learned Brāhmaṇa at Bhrgukaccha. Indu grows up to be a man of character, popular and learned; Bindu, an ignorant and insolent knave. On their way home, the jealous Bindu tries to kill Indu and leaves him as dead in a village on the banks of the Mahī. He returns to his city, and reports that Indu died on the way; later, he changes the story and informs Indu's father that his son is gone to Kāśī for further studies. Mindu, now, poses as a prodigy of learning. He is invited by the king to a debate with the Brāhma as of the court, and is worsted. Unable to live up to his boast, he leaves the town, promising to return in two months with the solution of the questions put to him.

Mindu, in his travels, comes to the village of kolis, where he thought he had killed Indu, and is surprised to find that his friend was alive and had made it flourish. Indu welcomes Mindu; saves him from his kolī followers who, angry at the insolence of Mindu, want to kill him; and returns with Mindu to Ratnapurī as his disciple to help him secure a triumph over the Brāhmaṇas of the town.

When they attend court, Mindu refers all the problems put to him to his disciple. Indu solves all questions; and the king and the learned Brāhmaṇas are all pleased. But the jealous Mindu again tries to deprecate Indu. The king, suspecting the truth, has enquiries made. The headman of the kolis tells the whole truth to the king, who turns out Mindu and installs Indu as the royal purohita. Mindu meets with an untimely end.

If this work is not a forgery, akhyāna for the first time drops its borrowed Samskr̥tic framework and becomes a story of real life. But the life as it appears has neither greatness nor beauty.

XI

Of all the pupils of Premānanda, Ratneśvara (c. 1700) was the most notable. Among his works were Śiśupālavadha; Bhāgavata; Mūrkhaklakṣaṇāvali (1714); Vairāgyalātā and other padas; Laṅkākaṇḍa and Rādhākṛṣṇanā Mahinā. Throughout life he was persecuted by rival purāṇikas; and, after his death, parts of his Bhāgavata were thrown into the Narmadā by his illiterate sons at the instance of his rivals. A great student of Samskr̥ta, he attained a purity, elegance and richness of style which were beyond the reach of his contemporaries. In his Mahinā he describes Rādhā in a conventional vein but with a charm of language approaching Modern Gujarātī poetry.

Madana let fly his arrows at her; and she fell pierced. Tied by the fetters of love, she cried "Hari! Hari!". She wept, disconsolate at the separation, wiping her tears with her cloth. As she looked into the mirror, she saw her eyes dawn-red.¹

Again she addresses the cloud :

Oh cloud ! Listen to my words. Stop the rain and pause for a while. Tell

-
1. प्रकटी मदन व्याधि, मो'हयों बाण सांधी;
हरि हरि कहे राधा, प्रेमने पाश बांधी;
विरह विकळ रोती, चीरखुं नीर ल्हो'ती;
अरुण नयन दीसे, आश जोतां अरीसे.

me the news of Kṛṣṇa. What message do you bring from Madhupūra. Did you see Kṛṣṇaji, sweet as his flute ? ¹

XII

Sāmaḷabhata was a junior contemporary of Premānanda. He was born about the year 1700. The earlier date, 1640, is obviously incorrect, for he composed his Angadaviṣṭi in 1752. He was a Śrigoḍa Mālvi Brāhmaṇa of Veṅgaṇapura (now Gomtipura), a suburb of Ahmedābād, and knew Samskr̥ta, Vraja and Persian. He left behind him no followers, and no school of poetry. Throughout his life, he appears to have waged a literary warfare with the school of Premānanda led by the arrogant Vallabha.

His Purāṇic works are Śiva Purāṇa (1748); Revākhanda; Angadaviṣṭi (1752); Rāvaṇamaṇḍodarisamvāda; Kālimahātmya; Śukadevākhyāna; Draupadivastrāharāṇa. His works of fiction are Batrisāputli; Sudābohteri; Padmāvatī (1718); Nanda-batrisi; Vinecatāni Vārtā; Barāsakasturini Vārtā; Caṇḍra-caṇḍrāvatī; Madanmohanā; Vidhātāni Vārtā; Sundara Kamadāra; and Bhojakathā. His miscellaneous works, including those of doubtful authorship, are Raṇachodanā Śloka, Udyamakarmasamvāda, Śāmalaratnamāla, Abhrāmakulina-śloka or Rustam-bahādurno Pavāḍo (c. 1725), Boḍhāṇo, Rakhidāsa-caritra, Viśveśvarākhyāna, and Raṇastambha.

Sāmaḷa at one time was appraised as a great writer of original fiction and a peer of Premānanda; but materials which are now available necessitate a re-estimate of his works. He attempted Purāṇic subjects, but could only produce ordinary ākhyānas. Though he twitted Premānanda for being merely a copyist of older purāṇikas in the well-known line 'कहेछुं कहे ते शानो कवि?' he took all his stories from early Gujarātī fiction. The originals he copied were mostly Jaina compositions and not easily accessible twenty years ago. That he was not the independent man he pretended to be, is clear from the hyperbolic epithets which

1. सुण घन मुज वाणी, वर्षतां राख पाणी,
क्षण इक थिर रेनी, कृष्णनी वात केनी;
मधुपुरथकी आव्यो, शो समाचार लाव्यो,
मधुरी मुरली मीठो, कृष्णजी क्यांय दीठो ?

he showered upon his Pātidāra patron, Rakhīdāsa, whom he compared to Bhoja in generosity. His attack on the venerable Premānanda, who, throughout life, maintained the dignity of the noble profession of a purāṇika, scarcely reveals good taste or generous impulses.

I have not learnt any Purāṇa and I have not studied the Vedas. I know no figure of speech and I am not sorry. I do not wander from house to house, and I have no son to sing my praises. I do not go from court to court to receive presents. Bards, Brāhmaṇas and buffoons shout loudly, and the audience well pleased says 'well done'. But I feel grieved at this.¹

Grapes were, indeed, sour. Critics half a century ago went into ecstasies over him for having discovered in him a modern social reformer; but now we know that they were portraits of social conditions which generations of story-tellers had preserved from a past long gone by, and which Śāmaḷa bodily adopted from his predecessors. He could not impart local colour, nor give a contemporary touch so well as Premānanda. His observation was neither vast nor keen; his views were conflicting and trite; and he had no fresh outlook to present. His plots, mostly taken or reweven from older works, show but slight improvement. He has been able to add to the old stock only a few characters or pictures of real life. The riddles are there; and so are the long, nerveless descriptions.

But his greatness lies in his matchless style and wonderful power of story-telling; in presenting didactic and worldly maxims in striking parallelisms; and in presenting the romantic atmosphere of early fiction, and thereby providing a valuable literature of escape from the morbid influences of his times. His chappās, made up of six-line verses, illustrating a point of view have acquired an abiding place in the literature.

-
1. भण्यो नथी कोई पुराण हुं, भण्यो नथी कोई वेद,
रसालंकार न आवडे, मन न पामे खेद.
घर घर राग ताणुं नहि, पुत्र न मुज गुण गाय,
राज दरबारे रझळवुं, मेळवी नथी पसाय.
भाट ब्राह्मण ने भांडवा, लांबी मूकी पोक,
रीझी भला भला कहे, तेथी थाये शोक.

He who was highly respected, left his pride, and was seen begging. He who was highly respected, bowed low to the mean and the lowly. He who was highly respected, became poor and was punished. He who always saw good omens died, and left a widow. The man of large wealth and no learning is but poor indeed. God can make a mountain out of a blade of grass. What is then the use of harbouring pride?

The poet stigmatised women thus :

Some women have killed their husbands; some have left their high-placed husbands to marry menials; some have left their children and families and gone to live with others. Some have deserted a king, to give themselves up to pleasures. Some have killed their sisters and mothers-in-law; some their parents. A woman is a living witch. She robs the strongest of their strength.¹

At another place, the poet recognised their worth after the fashion of his times.

When young, she gives pleasure and company. She looks after your bodily comforts; talks affectionately and ministers to pain and anguish. She shares happiness and misery; sings your virtues sweetly. She steals your heart and glories in it. In old age, she nurses you. When you see her, you forget your pain. Not even in death, does she forsake you; out of affection, she immolates herself on the funeral pyre with you.²

XIII.

And thus we see two authors—Premānanda, and Sāmaḷa—standing in bright contrast to the murky background of other-worldliness which spread over two centuries; each proud of Gujarāta and the Gujarātī language; each a law unto himself. And, of the two, Premā-

1. कैके मार्या कंथ, कैके परण्या परहरिया;
कैके उंच असीर, तर्जी किंकर वर करिया;
कैके कुटुंब परिवार, तर्जी चित वीजे चाली;
कैके महिपतिने मेलि, माननी गमते महाली;
कैके सासु नणंद संहारियां, मात पिता मर्दन कर्यां;
ए जुवति जात छे जक्षणी, जोर जोरावरनां हर्यां.

जोबनमां दे रंग, संग सुख टाढक तननी;
बालपणे करी वात, मटाडे पीडा मननी;
सुख दुःखमां सम भाग, राग रुडे गुण गाती;
चतुरा चित्त हरनार, सार उरमां मदमाती.
वळी वृद्धपणे सेवा करे, देख्यार्था दिलदुःख टळे;
ए अंतकाळ अळगी नहि, बहु स्नेहे साथे बळे.

nanda stands out foremost. Before his sturdy faith in life and joy, the background recedes like the disappearing mist. With a humorous twinkle in his eye and a joyous note in his voice, he passes on to his world-weary generation the inspiration of Vyāsa.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE END OF OLD GUJARĀTA : DAYĀRĀMA (1767-1852).

Influence of Arabic, Persian and Urdu—Mirāt-i-Ahmadi. Political conditions (1707-1852)—Persian literature by Gujarātis—Converts to Islam and their literature—The literature of the Pārsis—The decadent literature—Dhīro (1753-1825)—Nirānta (1770-1846)—Bhojo (1785-1850)—Pritamadāsa (c. 1730) The Swāmīnārāyaṇa sect—Its poets—Dayārāma (1767-1852)—Personality and temperament—His Life—His Works—His garabis—The close of Old Gujarāta.

The period between 1707 and 1818 was one of wretchedness, disorder and misery for unfortunate Gujarāta. Its wealth and weakness attracted the avarice of every ambitious raider in the vicinity. Its wealth was destroyed; its agriculture and commerce were crippled; its culture was arrested. Social life grew more stagnant and narrow. What better soil can Akhā's gospel require?

I

The sorry tale of feuds and intrigues between 1700 and 1852 may be shortly recounted. The policy of Aurangzib and the raids of the Marāṭhās marked the beginning of an era of disorder and misfortune. The great landlords refused to pay tribute; the imperial viceroys, unable to enforce payment or maintain order, only looked after themselves. Hindu zemindars extended a welcome to Marāṭhās in the hope of shaking off the Muslim rule. Petty Mussalman fauzdars took advantage of the prevailing disorder to declare their independence as nawabs. The chiefs of Junāgadha, Bālāsīnora, Pālaṇapura and Cambay raided one another's territory, plundering towns and destroying villages.

Śivājī and the great Peshvās, no doubt, dreamt of a well-governed empire in India. But their agents looked upon Gujarāta more as a treasure to be robbed than a country to be governed, and restricted themselves to exacting an annually growing tribute. Irresponsible agents of the Peshvās, the Gaekvāḍas and the Sindhiās extorted revenues and allowances from peasants by all possible means, with the result that fertile districts were left uncultivated. Military occupation of the Marāṭhās is aptly described as 'a system without the breath of life, without elasticity, without the capacity of self-direction, imposed bodily upon a foreign people, without even the care of preparing a foundation.¹

The East India Company appeared on the scene; occupied the Surat castle in 1759; and soon set one Marāṭhā power fighting against another.

In 1761 Ahmedshāh Abdali dealt a decisive blow to Marāṭhā supremacy at Pānīpat. Bālāji Bājirāo, the great Peshvā, died of a broken heart. His brother, the perfidious Raghobā, disputed succession with his son, fled to Surat and allied himself with the East India Company. The British got their chance. Māhādji Sindhiā turned a traitor to the Peshvā. The Gaekvāḍa of Baroda was induced to throw off his allegiance to Poona, but, unable to withstand the combined force of Hindu and Mussalman chiefs of Gujarāta, threw himself in the arms of the Company. The Marāṭhā was followed.

Gujarāta was thus turned into one vast field of endless battle. "In this city," says Forbes in his Oriental Memoirs (1781) referring to Ahmedābād "commerce once met with every encouragement. It was the resort of merchants, artists and travellers of every description. It now exhibits solitude, poverty and desolation." The trade and commerce of Cambay and Ghoghā were equally ruined.

In 1803 the British wrested Broach from Daulatrāo Sindhiā. They protected the possession of the Gaekvāḍa or Sindhiā against the Peshvā, or acquired the Peshvā's rights over Gujarāta against them. And with the battle of Kirkee, in 1818, the Company finally stepped into the place of the Peshvā in Gujarāta. And till 1853, when they took the district of Panch Mahals on lease from Sindhiā, the British continued to quell disorder, destroy hostile powers, and lay the foundation of settled government. In this process, they also dismembered Gujarāta. Jhālora and Sirohī, once centres of Gujarāṭī culture, were handed over to Rajputānā; and Dungarpūrā, Vānsavāḍa and Alirāipurā to Central India.

1. Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. I, p. 432.

II

Political influence directedly operated only upon a very narrow province of life. On the sultanate being established, Persian and, later, Urdu became the language of court, law and office. Mussalman authors attached to the Sultans or the viceroys wrote many works in Persian. Mirat-i-Sikandari (1536), written by a Gujarātī convert from Mehmādābād, is the first valuable Mussalman history of Gujarāta.

But Ali Mahamud Khan Bahadur was perhaps the most noteworthy Mussalman historian of Gujarāta. He suppressed riots in Ahmedābād in 1730; was a superintendent of customs in 1748; and was confirmed in the said office in 1753 by Raghunathrāo and Dāmājī Gāekvāḍa who finally overthrew the representatives of the shadowy imperial power in Gujarāta. His Mirāt-i-Ahmadi is a work of great importance.

The castes from which Hindu officials were drawn also took to the study of Arabic, Persian and Urdu. They claimed men who could teach these languages. A few literary men also composed poems in Persian and Urdu. But the influence of these languages on Gujarātī literature was neither deep nor lasting.

Thakordāsa Daru, a Kāyastha of Surat, sent a kasido, a poem, to the Mogul Emperor every year. Nandalāla Munshi of Broach (c. 1700) attracted the attention of Emperor Mahamūd Shāh Ālamgir by his poems. Kavi Bhagavāndāsa (1681-1746), a divan of the nawab of Surat, composed poetry in Arabic, Persian, Urdu, besides Saṃskṛta, Gujarātī and Marāṭhī. Śrīdāsa, a Nāgara Brāhmaṇa, composed Fatuhāt-i-Ālamgiri (1731), a history of the reign of Aurangzib, in Persian. Premānanda directed his pupil Virjī to compose poetry in the style of Persian and Urdu poets. Sāmālā Bhaṭa knew Persian and was the first poet who freely used Persian words. Manoharaswāmī (1788-1845), a poet, was a student of Persian. And Raṇachōḍājī Dīvān (1768-1841), a warrior and a literary man of Kāṭhiāvāḍa, was 'an acknowledged patron of poets, men of science and literary genius.'¹

1. Mrs. Peston in Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, quoted by D. B. Zaveri, Milestones in Gujarati Literature.

He wrote Tarikha-e-Soratha, The History of Soratha, and Rukate-Gunagun, Diverse Letters, in Persian, besides poems in Gujarāṭi and Vraja. Dayārāma composed poems in Punjābī and Urdu. But such literary work did not come natural to the Gujarātis, and, when Persian and Urdu ceased to be official languages, their interest in them, for all practical purposes, came to an end.

The Mussalman rulers exerted a more enduring influence on dress, music, luxuries and pleasure-hunts of diverse kinds; and the upper classes in Gujarāta who adopted them enriched Gujarāṭi by contributing foreign words and idioms appertaining to these activities.

III

Under the Cālukya and the Vāghelā kings, Mussalman traders and mercenaries came and settled in Gujarāta. Their religious freedom was safeguarded. Siddharāja gave compensation to the traders of Cambay whose mosque had been destroyed by Hindus: a remarkable instance of the sense of justice which dominated Hindu kings. Mussalmans were often absorbed in the Hindu community. In 1178, when Bāla Mūlraja defeated the army of Shāhābu-ud-din Ghori, the Turks, the Afghans and the Moguls were admitted as Rajputs, and many Mussalman women were converted to Hinduism and accepted as wives by Hindus. Since 1297, Turks, Habshis, Abyssinians, Manchukes, Arabs, Persians, Khorasanis dribbled into Gujarāta as part of some conquering army or as adventurers in search of employment, and constituted the unruly and irresponsible element in every army. The Sidis of Janjira, in 1670, accepted the vassalage of Emperor Aurangzib, and, as admirals of the imperial fleet, settled in Surat.

But the great bulk of Mussalmans, who form about 8 to 10 per cent. of the total strength of the Gujarātis, was made up of Hindu converts. They never held themselves aloof from the social and cultural influences of their own land and lived on peaceful terms with the Hindus.

Even the proselytisers gave to Islam as local a colour as they possibly could. Nur-ud-din Satagar or Satguru came to Gujarāta about 1001 as a missionary of the Ismailia sect of Islam; and the converts made by him and his disciples came to be called Khojas. According to their tenets, Ali was the tenth incarnation of Vishṇu, and Hinduism and Islam were one. The bhajanas of this sect, though without literary flavour, are turned out on the usual Gujarātī pattern. Other Mahomedan sects like the Mātāpantha, the Pīrānāpantha and the Borahs who follow Pīr Chishti have their bhajanas in the same style. A well-known poetess, Ratanbai, of the last named sect has composed songs in honour of Kayam-din Pīr distinctly under the inspiration of the padas of Mirānbāi.¹

IV

A few Persians, flying before the iconoclastic zeal of the Arabs, left Persia and settled near Sanjāna in the Surat District about 758. The settlers and their descendants accepted girls from lower classes of Hindus as wives; and, except in religious matters, adopted the language and the social habits of their neighbours.

Some Parsi poets composed in Persian. Bahmana Kaikobad composed Kissa-e-Sanjāna, (1600), a poem on the landing of the Parsis, at Sanjāna. Mulla Feroze bin Kano (c. 1758-1830), a native of Broach, wrote an epic in Persian on the conquest of India by the English under the name of George-nameh at the instance of Jonathan Duncan, Governor of Bombay.

The Parsi poets composed poems in the inaccurate variety of Gujarātī prevailing in the villages of Surat, though they freely borrowed words from Persian, Pahelavi and Zend. Many of them studied Samskr̥ta, and translated Zend or Pehlavi poems into Samskr̥ta before rendering them in Gujarātī. One of the earliest of such translations is Arda-viraf-nameh by Behram Lakhmidhar (1451). Later poets, following Gujarātī poets, composed ākhyānas from their religious literature, or from the Shāh-nameh of Firdausi. Their technique, taste and style form the curiosities of Gujarātī literature. For instance Erwad Rustom Peshotan of Surat composed Zarhosht-nameh (1676), Siyavaksha-nameh (1680) and other poems. His works bear traces of the influence of Samskrta, as also of Hindu manners and customs adopted by the Parsis. His description of the ladies of Iran runs :

1. Vide D. B. Jhaveri's article, Gujarātī Sāhitya, p. 188.

The ornament on your head is like the full moon and the brilliant sun of amāvāsyā; it sheds a flood of light on this arid desert. The ornament on your fore-head is studded with the planets Mercury, Jupiter and Venus. Who set your nose-ring with the sabcerāga gem? ¹ Your ear-rings are made of rubies and pearls; God himself has given you the ornaments of your neck. The bracelets and wristlets flash like lightning; the anklets tinkle on your feet.

V

Under conditions such as those described, literature could only echo Akho's weary gospel.² Quotations from a few poets will show the tendency of the times. The bhajanas of Dhīra (1753-1825) were in every one's mouth. A Brahmabhāṭa by caste, he came from Goṭhḍā in the district of Baroda. Dominated by a very hot-tempered wife, he led an unhappy life, composing padas, called kāfis, and publishing them in a somewhat novel way. He wrote out his poems on paper, enclosed them in pieces of bamboos and set them afloat in the river Mahī for a chance reader to pick up. His works are didactic and philosophical. His best-known work is Svarupanī kāfi. His kāfis are written in a clear, homely and telling style, and have the sentiments of Akhā without his lashing bitterness. His outlook, for instance, is expressed in his Jñāna Kakka, The Alphabet of Knowledge. When he comes to the letter 'Da' he says :

'Da' is for dahāpana, wisdom. Why do you adulterate your wisdom? To-day, you are wise, very wise, indeed. But how many wise men have sunk?

-
1. A gem which gives light at night.

તમ સીશ ફુલ પુનમ ચંદ ને અમાશી સૂર ।
 એ વેરાંન રાંગમાં એથી ઘણું વરશે છે નૂર ॥
 તમ નીડાલ ટીક બુધ બહરેસ્પત શુકર જડી ।
 તમ નાશકા નથ તે સવચેરાગ કોણે ઘડી ॥
 તમ કાન કૂંડલ જડેઆ જાણે માંગક ને મોતે ।
 કોટ અમરણ પેહેરાવેઆં આપ ધણીએ પોતે ॥
 કર ચૂડ પોહોંવી જાણે વીજ ચમક ચમકીને જાણે ।
 પાણે પેજણ તે નેવરનો જહ્નકારજ થાણે ॥

2. See Note A at the end of the chapter.

Aren't you ashamed to see them sinking? The wise have sunk in worldliness. Wisdom was of no avail to them when Death got hold of them. He who knows the true wisdom about the body alone is happy.¹

Nirānta Bhagata (1770-1846) of Dethāna, near Baroda, and a Pātīdāra by caste, was another popular poet. His outlook was philosophic, and his language, simple and charming. He uses Urdu words more freely than any other poet of his time.

Such an occasion will never come ; let us worship Hari. A fool will give a diamond for a cownie. Let us worship Hari with affection. What can we say?

The flowing water will continue to flow. Fathers and grandfathers have gone before us. How can we be left behind? Son, wealth and wife, family and descendants are yours ; but, at the moment of death, who will save whom?

Remember, friends are only bound by self-interest. Know this for certain : no one is another's relative or casteman.

Death hovers over your head. It will do what it likes, and when. Death, the counsellor of evil, will not let any one go. The fear of Death is the greatest fear of all. Why are you trustful? Why do you live in enjoyment? You fish of shallow waters! When he comes no one will listen to you. Only those who worship Hari are like Hari. If you believe so, listen to the name of Hari.²

1. डङ्गा ! डोळे शु डहापणरे डाह्योडाह्यो थई आजे ?
डाह्यां डूल्या केटलारे ते तुं जोइ नव लाजे.
डहापण दरियाव हता ते डूली गया दुनियानी मांय;
डहापण तेनुं काई काम न आव्युं जमडाए झाल्या ज्यांय;
दिदार केरु डहापणरे जाणे ते तो राजे. डङ्गा !
2. आवो अवसर फरी फरी नहीं आवे रे, हरि भजीए.
मूरख हीरो कोडी तुल्य गमावे, हेते हरि भजीए. १
वेहेतां जळ तो वही जशेरे शुं कहीए, हरि भजीए.
पितुपितामह सर्व गया तो आपण कयांथी रहीए. हेते हरि भजीए. २
सुतवित्त दारा कुळ कुडुंब सहु तारे रे, हरि भजीए.
अंत वेळाए कोने कोण उगारे, हेते हरि भजीए. ३
सखे जाणजो स्वारथतुं छे साक्षीरे, हरि भजीए.
नथी जाणजे नेक सगुं ने न्याती, हेते हरि भजीए. ४
मृत्यु जाणजो माथा उपर भमतुं रे, हरि भजीए.
ज्यारे त्यारे करशे एनुं गमतुं, हेते हरि भजीए. ५
काळ कुबुद्धि केड न मेले कोनीरे, हरि भजीए.
बहु बीकछे मृत्यु मोटा मोनी, हेते हरि भजीए. ६

Bhojo Bhagata (1785-1850) a more aggressive poet of this class, a Pātidāra from Kāthiāvāḍa, did not know how to read and write. He learnt bhakti and yoga from some unknown ascetic wandering in the forests of Gīranāra and spent his life in singing padas. His Salaiyākhyāna is not an outstanding work; but his principal contribution to literature is his Caḅkha, lashes, in which he attacked social vice with effective bitterness. He died at Virapura and left a large number of followers.

His disgust for life is fearful.

I saw the miseries of the world, and sent away my wife to her parents. One child would ask for a top; another, a net; the third would say: "Get me raiment made"; and a fourth would like good food.

When I get anklets made, my wife wants a bodice; when I get a ring made, she wants a nose-ring. She does not let me rest in peace the whole day. Let the cage she had made for me be broken. She will go to sleep scolding; and scolding, she will rise. She is an expert in quarrels; I have never seen her with a bright face; the whole day long she does not leave me.

When guests come, she conceals herself in the house. When the children become naughty, she pinches them cruelly. Now I have sent her away to her parents with all her clothes. And my worries have gone with her. Bhojo Bhagata says, thanks to my teacher, I will never have such a wife.¹

શે ભરોસે શા સુખમાં તું માહાલેરે, હરિ ભજીએ.
થોડા જઠ્ઠના જીવ તારું નહીં ચાલે, હેતે હરિ ભજીએ. ૭
હરિ ભજે તે હરિ સરસા જન જાણોરે, હરિ ભજીએ.
એકં ઈચ્છો તો હરિનું નામ પરમાણો, હેતે હરિ ભજીએ. ૮
મન માનેતો તારા કાજનું કહીએરે, હરિ ભજીએ.
નીરાંત નામે જમને હાથ ન જઈએ, હેતે હરિ ભજીએ. ૯

1. રે મેં દુઃખ દુનિયાનાં બાઢી, પરણી નારી પિયેર મેલી વાઢી રે.
એકજ માગે ભમરડો ને વીજો તે માગે જાઢી રે;
ત્રીજો રે કહે મને ઢગલી શીવડાવો ને ચોથો લે છે પેટ પાઢી રે મેં.
કઢલાં ઘડાવું ત્યારે કાંબીઓ રે માગે, ને વીંટી ઘડાવું ત્યારે વાઢી રે;
આઠ જ પહોર મને જંપવા ન દે, એનાં પાંજરિયાં મેલ પરજાઢી રે. રે મેં.
વઢતી રે સૂએ ને વઢતી રે ઝૂટે, કજીઆમાં છે કારી રે;
ઝજઢાં સુખ એનાં કદિયે ન દીઢાં, એ તો આઠે પહોર ઓઢિયાઢી રે. રે મેં.
બારણે રે આવ્યા પાંચ પરૂના ને ધાઢને તે ઘરમાં પેઢીરે;
છોકરાંને તો ઘમચી મચાવે ત્યારે ચૂંટલા લે છે તાળી તાળી રે. રે મેં;

The hymn of death is the best known lash of the poet.

Oh soul! Worship the Creator. The world is but a dream; surely you will leave your wealth and riches, property and treasures, sons and grandsons; and you will only bear the lashes of death.

The wealthy have left behind them their houses, high with storeys, beautiful with terraces and endless windows.

Flowers will be thrown over him; four cocoanuts will be tied under him; he will be anointed and bound to the bamboo bier; and people will bewail his death.

In life, he never slept without a bed and bedstead; he did a thousand other things. But, all the same, he will be stoked on the funeral pyre as if a blacksmith is melting iron, and burnt to ashes.

They will go to the burning place, set up a pyre, and lay on him a load of wood. They will then set him on fire and leave him. His body will be in flames. They will, then, take their bath, and abandon him. Bhojo Bhagata says, men and women will shed tears for ten days and then forget him.¹

Pritamdāsa (c. 1730), a bhāṭa by caste, has composed Sārasagīta (1764) and the usual kind of padas on sṃgāra, vairāgya and jñāna. Some of his padas bear the impress of originality. His well-known pada runs:

The ways of Hari are for the brave; the coward knows them not.

Who offers his head first, he alone can utter His name. He only enjoys eternal bliss who dedicates his son, his wealth, his wife, his head.

Who are alive and yet dead to the world, they only can dive into the sea for pearls. Who ever defies death, ceases to suffer. But the spectator on the shore never gains a cowrie.

પટોઢાં લઈને મેં તો પિયર વઢાવી ને દુઃખડાં મેલ્યાં ટાઢી રે;
મોજો ભગત કહે ગુરુપ્રતાપે કદીએ ન પરણું આવી નારી રે. રે મેં.

1. પ્રાણીઆ મજી લેને કિરતાર, આ તો સ્વપતું છે સંસાર,
ધન દોલત ને માલ ખજીના, પુત્ર અને પરિવાર;
એમાંથી જાઈશ તું એકલો, પછે કાશે જમના માર રે. પ્રા.
અંચી મેઢી અજવ ઢસલા, ગોખતણો નહિ પાર;
કોઢી ઘ્વજ ને લક્ષપતિ, તેનાં બાંધ્યાં રહ્યાં ઘરબારે. પ્રા.
અપર ફુલડાં ફરફરે ને, હેઠે શ્રીપદ ચાર;
ઠીક કરીને એને ઠાઠડીમાં ઘાલ્યો, પછે વાંસે પડે પોકારે. પ્રા.
સેજ તઢાયું વિના સુતો નહિ, જીવ હુન્નર કરતો હજાર;
ઘોરી ઘોરીને ઘૂબ જઢાયો, જેમ લોઢું ગાઢે હુવારે. પ્રા.
સ્મશાન જઈં ચેહે ઘડકીને, માથે છે કાષ્ટનો માર;
અમ્મિ મેલીને ડમાં રહ્યાં, અને નિશ્ચય ઢારે અંગારે. પ્રા.
સ્નાન કરીને ચાલી નીકળ્યાં, નર ને વઢી નાર;
મોજો ભગત કહે દસ દી રોઈને, પછે મેલ્યો વિસારે. પ્રા.

The ways of love burn with the flames of fire. Many look at them and run away; those that jump into them are happy; those who look on are miserable.

To barter the head for rich prize is not easy; the pure, who welcome death in life itself, attain greatness.

Those who love Him are happy. When the kingdom of Rāma comes, they alone see the glory of the Lord of Pritama.¹

VI.

The sect of Swāminārāyaṇa greatly influenced the literature of the period. Its great leader, Sahajānanda, born at Chapaiyā near Ayodhyā about 1781, was a disciple of Rāmānanda, the founder of the sect. The sect drew its inspiration partly from the Vaishṇavite doctrines of Vallabhācārya, but developed special features owing to Sahajānanda's influence. Its speciality lay in its antagonism to the gross epicurianism of the Vallabha sect. Purity of conduct was above all virtues. Twenty-six vows were enjoined in relation to women; even seeing a woman, or her portrait, or pronouncing her name was prohibited. The sect did very good work among the poorer classes and the turbulent tribes of Kāthiāvāda. The lot of even untouchables was somewhat relieved by its philanthropic activities. But Sahajānanda went the way of the successors of Vallabhācārya in surrounding himself with semi-regal pomp and in having Kṛṣṇa worshipped in his own person. The principal seat of the sect at Vāḍatāla is one of the wealthiest

1. हरिनो मारग छे शूरानो, नहि कायरनुं काम जो ने;
परथम पहेलुं मस्तक मूकी, वळ्ती लेवुं नाम जो ने.
सुत वित दारा शिश समरपे, ते पामे रस पीवा जो ने;
सिंधु मध्ये मोती लेवा, मांहि पड्या मरजीवा जो ने.
मरण आगमे ते भरे मूठी, दिलनी दुग्धा वामे जो ने;
तीरे उभो जुवे तमासो, ते कोडी नव पामे जो ने.
प्रेम पंथ पावकनी ज्वाला, भाळी पाछा भागे जो ने;
मांही पड्या ते महा सुख माणे, देखनारा दाक्षे जो ने.
माथा साटे मोंघी वस्तु, सांपडवी नहीं स्हेल जो ने;
महापद पाम्या ते मरजीवा, मूकी मननो मेल जो ने.
राम अमलभ्रमां राता माता, पूरा प्रेमी परखे जो ने;
प्रीतमना स्वामीनी लीला, ते रजनी दन नरखे जो ने.

n Gujarāta. The sect, however, retained its purity, and its sādhus are still found in villages bringing religious and moral succour to the simple and the illiterate.

Many poets who composed poetry in the early decades of the nineteenth century were sādhus of this sect. Prominent among them were Muktānanda (1761-1824), a friend of Sahajānanda ; Brahmānanda, originally a bhāṭa by caste ; and Premānanda Sakhī (1779-1845). All these poets sang about Kṛṣṇa's amours, rhymed moral teachings, and bewailed the futility of life in the best style of the age. Their principal works were either padas or garabīs. In beauty of language, Brahmānanda surpasses all his contemporaries except Dayārāma ; but, of these three, Premānanda was a poet of a high order ; perhaps, the only one between Narasiṅha and Dayārāma who sang with a passionate intensity of feeling, rich with the impulse of bhakti. Like Narasiṅha, he felt himself a gopī of Kṛṣṇa, but as embodied in Sahajānanda. Hence it was that he received the nickname of Sakhī, a female friend. Despite the monotony largely inherent in the subject, there is some artistic and imaginative beauty in his verse.

VII

To this weary, lifeless age, came a genuine poet, his wings unclipped by convention, soaring on high in search of real art and emotion. In 1767 Dayārāma, a Sathodarā Nāgara Brāhmaṇa, was born in picturesque Cāndoda—the charming village which, like Narcissus, looks at its own beauty reflected in the slow-moving, crystal waters of the Narmadā. Left an orphan when an infant, he was brought up by an aunt. As a boy, he was attractive, naughty and mischievous. He sang, played on musical instruments, and loved, like Kṛṣṇa, to play pranks on the young women of Cāndoda, who in those days had a proverbial reputation for flippancy. More than one antic is recorded of how he took liberties with them, broke their pots, and provoked the ire of respectable townsmen. Once he had to flee to an adjoining village, where he met Keśavānanda, a sanyāsin, and became his disciple.

At twenty, he moved to Dabhoi, an adjoining town. He travelled far and wide, and visited Gokula, Mathurā, Vṛndāvana, Kāśī and other famous places of pilgrimage. He carried the waters of the Ganges on his shoulders, and bathed at Rāmeśvara in the extreme south. Wherever he went, he sought the company of the learned and the devout. He studied Hindī, Vraja, and Saṁskṛta literature and mastered the works of Old Gujarātī poets. Vaishṇavism soon attracted him; and he changed his name from Dayāśaṅkara to Dayārāma. He visited Śrī Nāthaji, the principal shrine of the Vaishṇava sect. In the temples of goswāmīs, where the great paṇḍitas and poets of the time met, he acquired both inspiration and technique.

He had the personality of a born lover. Handsome, graceful and fastidious, he was a beau, and though he had little means of his own, the generosity of friends and admirers enabled him to live in the fashion of his times. He wore his hair long like the goswāmīs, and greased it with perfumed oils. His lips were red with betel-leaf; and he often partook of the mild and dreamy intoxicant, bhāṅga. His angarakhā was of thin, Dacca muslin, tight-fitting and embroidered. His dhoti came from Nagpur, and had the broad red silk border which even the rich coveted; and he wore it with finical grace. He never went out of doors without first donning newly dyed and fresh-folded, deep-red turban from Nadiad.

He sang with masterly skill, his melodious voice quivering with passion. His conversation was fascinating and he could hold forth with great learning on the religious topics of the day. His temperament was free, loving, careless, defiant of conventions and restive of all control. He was too proud to serve or to earn. His worship of Viṣṇu soon led him to play the role of a bhakta: it was the only way in which he could lead a life congenial to his temperament.

He was proud, passionate and irascible. "My head will not bow," he proudly said, "to any one except Śrī Kṛṣṇa." Gopālādāsa, who was a power in Baroda, invited him to compose poems in honour of Gaṇapati. He replied, "I am wedded to the Lord of gopīs. I have no other Lord; and I do not care whether you are pleased or wroth with me.”¹

His patron goswāmī once treated him with discourtesy. The irate poet declined to go to him, shut the door in his face, and broke the rosary which he wore as a mark of discipleship. On another occasion, he insisted on having a seat as high as the goswāmī's. Once he abused the goswāmī of Kāṅkrolī who used his spiritual role to cover a multitude of sins.

Dayārāma had not the making of a helpless gopī in him, nor the humility and self-surrender of a bhakta. The efforts of a prudish generation to conceal his foibles have failed. Dayārāma was human, all too human. His sex instinct was powerful; he loved women for what they were and for what they could give him; and he could not relinquish himself to the pure bhakti which while it abhorred women in life lingered long and fondly over the imaginary amours of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa. He could not be the bride of an imaginary Kṛṣṇa; he sought delight in admiring women as they sang the garbā or bathed in the river. Some of his fair admirers were drawn from the highest society.

He loved Ratanabāī, the widow of a goldsmith, and openly lived with her for thirty years. He did not look upon her as a curse, for he loved life well. He wondered how Ratana, a goldsmith's widow, and he, a Brāhmaṇa, came to be bound by such an indissoluble bond; and he attributed the relation to their being husband and wife in their past life—a Taraṅgalolā feeling in actual life. He flung respectability and conventions away, and besought a goswāmī's blessing on them both, eliciting the promise that they would meet again as husband and wife in a subsequent life a hundred years later. He loved Ratana passionately, and, for a man of his temperament, steadfastly. Once he drove her out of his house, but Ratana's devotion knew no bounds and she came back and served him loyally. Dayārāma, the orthodox Brāhmaṇa, cooked for both, and both took their meals together.

1. एक वर्यो गोपीजनवल्लभ, नहीं स्वामी बीजो;
नहीं स्वामी बीजोरे, मारे नहीं स्वामी बीजो. एक वर्यो०

On his death, he left her provided for, but his relatives robbed her of what had been settled on her. The poet died on the 9th of February 1852. He left a large number of followers and admirers all over Gujarāta. Till the last, he retained his sanity of outlook. A disciple wanted his permission to worship his sandals after his death—an honour generally reserved for the semi-divine; but the poet with humility would not grant it. "Who am I," he said, "that you should ask this of me?"

VIII

Dayārāma's works may be classified as follows :

(i) Compositions relating to the Vaishṇava sect of Vallabha e.g. Vallabhano Parivāra, Corāṣī Vaishṇavanuṇ Dholā, Bhaktiposhana. They are of very little literary value.

(ii) Religious or philosophical works containing the doctrines of this sect, e.g. Rasikavallabha and Satasaiyā in Hindi.

(iii) Purānic ākhyānas, e.g. Ajāmilākhyāna, Vaktrāsurākhyāna, Satyabhāmākhyāna, Okhāharana, Daśamalilā and Rāsapañcādhyāyī.

(iv) Miscellaneous works like Narasinha Mehtānī Hunḍī, Shadr̥tuvarṇana and Nitibhaktinā pado.

(v) Garabisaṅgraha. The collection of Garabīs.

Rasikavallabha is a poem expounding the Vaishṇava doctrine as against the Vedānta of Śaṅkara. The style is elegant, rich with the influence of Saṁskṛta and Vraja, and full of conventional imagery. The ākhyānas have nothing extraordinary about them. The poet lacked the art both of story-telling and portrait-painting which the eminent authors of the previous century possessed. His padas, ethical and devotional, do not rise above the level of the age which could claim the elegance of Brahmānanda. Dayārāma also wrote many poems in Hindi, Vraja, Marāṭhī, Punjabi, Saṁskṛta and Urdu.

IX

It is his Garabisaṅgraha which makes Dayārāma so great a poet. In an age predominated by Akhā's note of other-worldliness, he dares to be human. He adopts, no doubt, the cloak acceptable to his world. He sings, "I have wedded the Lord of the gopīs, and know no other master," ... "The relation of the gopī and Govinda is unique, and could not be understood by the worldly". He also, at places, echoes the cheap sneers flung at life by contemporary poets. But these lines do not ring true. Bhakti, to him, was an emotion intensely human and vividly passionate. He weaves exquisite conceits around this primitive theme, and he invests even the stereotyped Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa amours with fresh voluptuousness.

Dayārāma's genius was lyrical and found a suitable vehicle in the garabī. Though used for the main purpose of providing popular songs for the garabā dance, it was a great vehicle for lyrical expression. The first two or three lines of a garabī were generally lyrical; the rest were thrown into couplets, illustrating the dominant idea. Dayārāma could not eliminate the couplets; popular taste and the exigencies of the garabā would not permit such a departure. But he invested the form, as a whole, with a charm and rhythm of his own. He made use of popular melodies. His language was the most perfect used so far by any poet of Gujarāta; and his words were so arranged that sense and sound and meaning blended in harmony to express one brief experience with perfect art. Some of his best garabīs were addressed by the gopīs to Kṛṣṇa.

Don't look at me like that, My love ! My heart is a-flutter with your side-long glances; and it's pierced by your sharp pointed eyes. Yet to look at you is its only joy.

In you lives all beauty, all joy. To look at you is sheer bliss. As the pearl pendant from your nose, sways to and fro, so sways my heart.¹

No translation can express the bewitching charm of the original. The following address to Kṛṣṇa's flute is the most exquisite lyric in the language.

1. વાંકું મા જોશો વરણામીઆ, જોતાં કાઠજામાં કાંઈ થાય છે જી રે.

અણિયાઢી આંખે વાલમ પ્રાણ મારો પ્રોયો છે

મોહન મુખડું જોઈ મનડું મોહાય છે જીરે; વાંકું.

નલશીલ લ્હી રૂપ રસિક મધુર મનોહર,

જ્યાં જોઈએ ત્યાં આંલ ઢરી જાય છે જીરે: વાંકું.

Thou art his pet, his darling, Oh flute ! Thy enthralling voice hath captured his heart, but mine is pierced by every note. You drain off the nectar from his lips. What matter if I die ?

Thy voice drives me mad. Like a lingering torment, your shafts pierce my aching heart.

Swords and spears are merciful to thine venom-tipped shafts, Oh flute ! - For, they kill at a stroke, but thou delightest in slow torture.

Wives have thrown their honour to the winds ; saints, their saintliness orgetting, have sinned ; distracted, they have wandered through forests wishing but to hear thy voice.

Though thy dizzy pride might make you forget, remember what thou art. Remember, thou art but a wretched reed, rendered divine by his touch.

Thousands, thou hast maddened ; wedding my Lord, Oh flute, what wonder if thou hast in his company learnt to steal ? For, he steals butter, but thou hast stolen his heart.

My pride has crumbled into dust, wherein lie the thousand, humbled. But though all might answer to thy call, it is not to thee they answer ; but, to the slave of our Lord.¹

માનીતી તું છે મોહનતળી, હો વાંસલડીરે !
 તુંને વાલમ કરે છે ઘણું વહાલરે, હો વાંસલડી !
 મીઠો આવડો શો સોહોર, મોઢ્યો નંદનો કિશોર,
 તારું આવડું શું જોર, મુંડી ! કાલજડું મા કોર રે, હો વાંસલડી !
 પીએ અધરામૃત પીયુ તણું તું, હો વાંસલડી રે !
 અમારે શોક્ય સરીખું તું સાલ રે, હો વાંસલડી ! મીઠો.
 વાજી વાજીને વિહ્વલ કર્યાં હો વાંસલડી !
 તું તો પીડે અમારા પ્રાણ રે હો વાંસલડી !
 સુણતાં પડે છે હૃદે સાંસરાં હો વાંસલડી !
 તાહારા ટહુકારાથી મોહબાળ રે હો વાંસલડી ! મીઠો.
 ફેર ઘણું છે તારી જ્ઞપટમાં હો વાંસલડી !
 ભલાં તુંથી ભાલતરવાર રે હો વાંસલડી !
 એકી વારે તું હળી નાખની હો વાંસલડી !
 ઓ મુંડી થોડે થોડે મા માર રે, હો વાંસલડી ! મીઠો.
 પતિવ્રતાનાં પળ મુકાવ્યા હો વાંસલડી !
 તેં તો છોડાવીયાં સતીઓનાં સત્ય રે, હો વાંસલડી !
 વનવન કુંજ કુંજ ફેરવ્યાં તેં હો વાંસલડી !
 તેં તો સહુની કરી છે એવી ગત્ય રે, હો વાંસલડી ! મીઠો.
 ગરજે ગુમાનભરી આવડી, હો વાંસલડી !
 તું તો જોની વિચારી તાહારી જાતરે, હો વાંસલડી !

Here is another little lyric of beauty.

Listen to me, my friend ! Nanda's son is so charming and his words are so dear. Gokula is mad after him, for witchery lives in his eyes. Hear me, my friend ! He is so handsome and so dark. The charmer is so fascinating ! I love him so that I feel like pressing him in a warm embrace.¹

In another garabī, the gopi invites her lover.

Come to my house, my King, Lover mine ! Come to my house and love me. For days, I have treasured in my heart many sweet things. They are on my lips : I will tell them if my king meets me. I am only your bond-slave ; you held my hand, and I pledged myself to you. My youth is fleeing : come, my king ! You have many like me ; to me, you are but one. I cannot live without my king. To whom shall I confide my misery ? I have made my bed with flowers ; my heart is astir with joy. My soul ! Will you come and rest there ? I shall shampoo your feet. My love, Lord of Dayā ! Prince of Vraja ! I yearn for you for days. Come and satisfy me, my soul !²

जोतां तुं काष्ठ केरो करकडो हो वांसलडी !
 तुंने आज मळी छे ठकरात रे, हो वांसलडी ! मीठो०
 गतविहीणां तें घेहेलां कर्या, हो वांसलडी ;
 तें तो लग्नाळ्यु लालजुं लग्न रे, हो वांसलडी ;
 चोरनी संगे शीखी चोरवा, हो वांसलडी ;
 वहाले माखण चोरजुं ने तें तो मनरे, हो वांसलडी—मीठो०
 मान न राख्युं मानीतणुं, हो वांसलडी ;
 तें तो सहुने कर्या पाएमाल रे, हो वांसलडी ;
 दयाना प्रीतमनी दासी तुं खरी, हो वांसलडी ;
 तेडे सहुने बेठी तुं तो ठामरे, हो वांसलडी.—मीठो०

1. नंदनंदन अलबेलडो रे, एनां वहालां लागे छे वेण ;
 सांभळ सही मारी.

घेलुं कीधुं गोकुळियुं रे, एनां कामणगारां नेण ;
 सांभळ सही मारी.

नटवर सुंदर शामळो रे, मनगमतो मोहनलाल ;
 हृदया सरसो लेइ लपटावुं, मुने एवुं लागे छे वहाल ;
 सांभळ सही मारी.

2. मोहोले पधारो मारा राज, माणीगर ! मोहोले पधारो ;
 वहाल वधारो व्रजराज, माणीगर मोहोले पधारो.
 करी राखी छे एकटी, घणा दिवसनी छे गोठ ;
 राज मळे तो कीजीए आवी रही छे मारे होठ. माणीगर०

Another popular lyric runs thus :

What he finds in me I do not know. Again and again he stares at me, and he finds my face sweet.

When I go to fetch water he follows me. Unasked, he helps me with the pot ; scolding or spurning does not affect him, and flimsy pretexts bring him to my house.

When he sees me, he comes running and puts his necklace round my neck. Finding me alone he falls at my feet, begging humbly for a trivial favour.

Oh sister mine, I find him wherever I go. The Lord of Dayā will not leave me in peace.¹

And in an age when Dhiro and Bhojo sang of death, the poet utters the gospel of love. "Love will only flow out of the heart of him who is born of the essence of love."

X

At the time when the aged Dayārāma was singing his garabīs at Dabhoi, a new spirit was abroad and a new age had already been ushered in.³

હું સરખી બહુ આપને, મારે તો એક આપ;
રહેવાતું નથી રાજવળ, કોને કહું પરિતાપ ? માળીગર.
સેજ સમારી ફૂલડે, આનંદ ઝર ન સમાય;
પ્રાણજીવન ! ત્યાં પોઢશો, હું તો તઢાંસીશ પાય. માળીગર.
પ્રીતમદાસ દયા તળા શ્રીવ્રજરાજકુમાર !
ઘળા દિવસની હોંસ છે પૂરો પ્રાણાધાર ! માળીગર.

1. હું શું જાણું જે વહાલે મુજમાં શું દીઠું ?
વારે વારે સામું ભાલે મુખ લાગે મીઠું હું શું જાણું.
હું જાઝં જઝ ભરવા ત્યાં પુંઠે પુંઠે આવે,
વગર બોલાવ્યો વાલો વ્હેલડું ચઢાવે. હું શું જાણું.
વઢું ને તરછોડું તોયે રીસ ન લાવે;
કાંઈકાંઈ મિષે મારે ઘેર આવી બોલાવે. હું શું જાણું.
દૂર થકી દેખી વાલો મુને દોડ્યો આવી દોટે;
પોતાની માઢા કાઢી પહેરાવે મારી કોટે. હું શું જાણું.
મને એકલડી દેખી ત્યાં મારે પાલવે લાગે;
રંક થઈ કાંઈ કાંઈ મારી પાસે માગે. હું શું જાણું.
મુને જ્યાં જાતી જાણે ત્યાં એ આવી હૂકે;
બેની ! દયાનો પ્રીતમ મારી કેઢ નવ મૂકે. હું શું જાણું.

2. જે કોઈ પ્રેમઅંશ અવતરે, પ્રેમરસ તેના ઝરમાં ઠરે.

3. Vide Munshi, Thodānka Rasadarśano, p. 236 et. seq.

Old Gujarāta died with Dayārāma; from its ashes, new Gujarāta, phoenix-like, was born with Narmadāshankar.

NOTE A. MINOR POETS.

The principal among the minor authors and their notable works may be mentioned: Devidāsa, (1604) the author of Rukmīṇīharaṇa; Śivadāsa Virjī, the author of Surckhāharāṇa and Haridāsa, the author of Sītāviraha (1666), both pupils of Premānanda; Mukunda, the author of Bhaktamālā (1665); Vallabhabhāṭa (1700), the author of well-known garabīs; Kālidāsa (c. 1725), the author of Pratīdāśhāṇa; Bapu Saheb Gaekvāḍa (1779-1843), a member of the ruling family of Baroda, the author of many well-known bhajanas; Giradhara, (1787-1852), the author of a well-known Gujarātī rendering of Ramāyaṇa; Mukṭānanda (1761-1824), the author of Uddhavaḡṭha; Nishkulānanda (1821) and Manjukesānanda, the followers of Swaminārāyaṇa. Among poetesses may be mentioned Dīvālibāī (1791), Rādhābāī (1834), Kṛṣṇābāī, and Gauribāī (1759) who was a Vedāntin and an adept in Yoga.

PART III

MODERN GUJARĀTĪ

1852 to 1934

CHAPTER I

A NEW AGE AND ITS LITERATURE¹

(A. D. 1852-1885)

British occupation of Gujarāta (1818)—The possessions of the Gāekvāḍa of Baroda—The states of Kāṭhiavāḍa—Bombay and its influence—Education—The Native Education Society (1825)—Ranchodbhai Girdharbhai (1803-1873)—The Elphinstone Institution (1827)—The Gujarātī Jñāna Prasāraka Maṇḍālī—Buddhivardhaka Sabhā (1851)—Mumtāi Samācara (1822)—Mehtaji Durgaram (1809-1878)—Tuljaram Sukharam—A. Kinloch Forbes—Rāsamālā—The Gujarata Vernacular Society (1848)—Buddhīprakāśa (1850)—Dalpatram Dayabhai (1820-1898)—Dalpatkāvya—Hunnarnkhānnī Caddā (1851)—Mūkyā-abhimāna (1867)—English literature and its influence—Narmadashankar Lalashankar (1833-1886)—His life and temperament—Narmakośa (A. C. 1873)—Narmagāḍya (1865)—Narmakavītā (1866)—Father of Modern Gujarātī prose—Rājyāranga—His poetry—Rituvārṇana (1861)—Hinduo-nī Padātī (1864)—Narmad's Romanticism—The Spirit of Revolt—Resurgence of the Āryan culture—Dharmavicāra (1885)—Heroism and love—Navalram Laxmiram (1836-1888)—Navalagranthāvalī (1891)—Vīramātī (1869)—Kavijīvana (1887)—The drama—Ranchodbhai Udayaram (1838-1923)—Jayakumārī (1861)—Lalitāśukkhadarśaka (1866)—Fiction—Mahipatram Ruparam (1829-1891)—Nandshankar Tuljaram (1835-1905)—Karaṇa Ghelo (1868)—Bholanath Sarabhai (1823-1886)—Parsi Gujarātī.

The eighty years which follow the death of Dayārāma in 1852 fall naturally into three periods: (i) 1852 to 1885, (ii) 1885 to 1914, and (iii) 1914 to 1934.

In the period dealt with in this chapter, contact with the West created new forces in all spheres of life. It saw the high water-mark of fascination for all things Western and of contempt for many things Indian. It gave birth to renaissance in literature: to a new language, and a literary technique and tradition based on the Romanticism which dominated English literature in the first half of the nineteenth century.

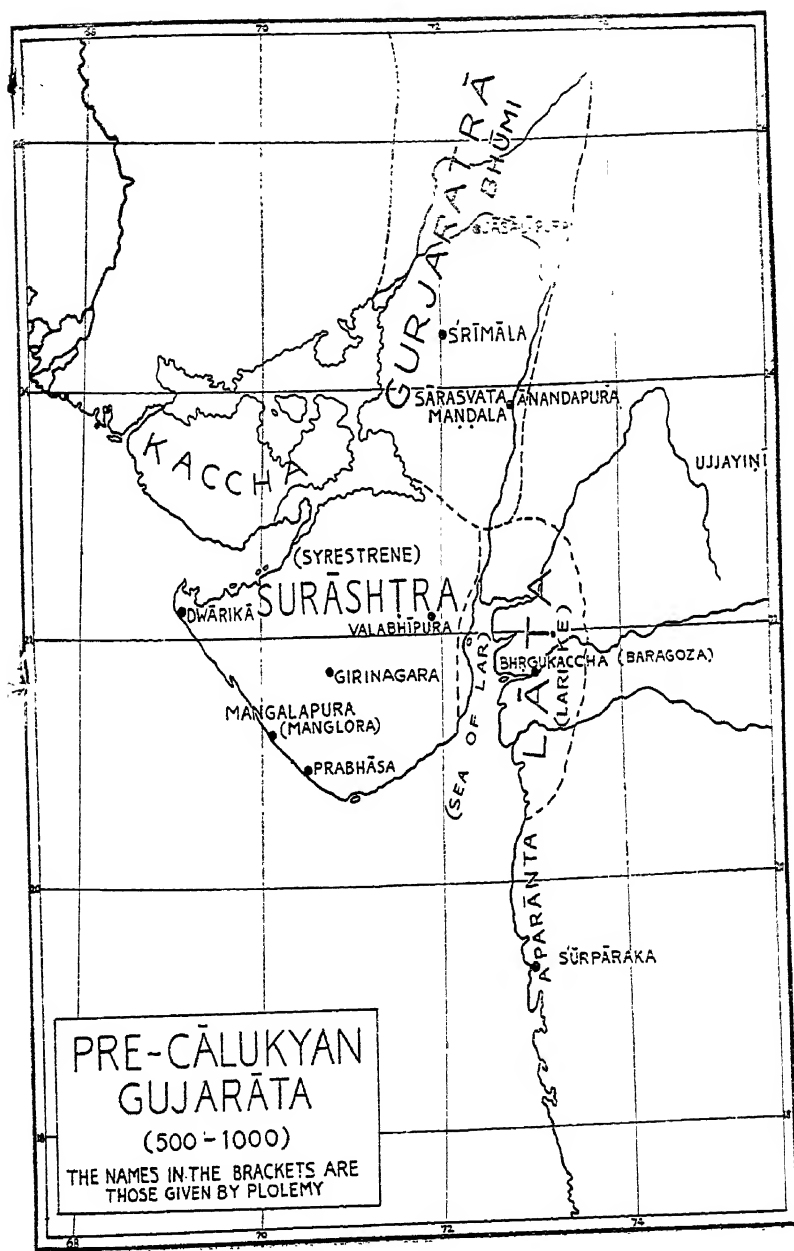

1. In the following chapters all names of individuals and towns are spelt as they are written by educated Gujarātīs, and not as they should be, having regard to the way they are pronounced.

II

With the battle of Kirkee, in 1818, a great age dawned upon Gujarāta. The people of Gujarāta entered upon a long period of peace; they also acquired as their capital Bombay, a port of growing international importance which established a living contact with Western culture. For Gujarāta, the history of this period is only a story of how these prehistoric Āryan colonies re-acted to these new conditions; how new impulses quickened life; and how the soul of the people, awakened to a fresh outlook, expressed itself through life and literature.

The Government of Bombay has directly governed only five districts in Gujarāta: Surat, Broach, Pancha Mahals, Kaira and Ahmedabad, rich in soil and resources. Surat still carries on a large trade, fosters diverse industries, and possesses a large class of wealthy and enterprising merchants. Broach, as a port, has not completely lost its importance; Narmadā is the largest waterway in the province and the fertility of the district is proverbial. Ahmedabād, with its vast banking resources, has controlled trade and commerce in North Gujarāta, Kathiāvāḍa and parts of Rajputānā. With the district of Thāṇā possessing an element of Gujarātī speaking people, British Gujarāta stretches from the eastern boundary of Kaccha to Bombay.

The possessions of the Gaekvāḍa of Baroda run contiguous to the British districts and include the districts round Amreli and Dvārikā in Kathiāvāḍa. In the early decades of the nineteenth century, the rulers of Baroda had not adapted themselves to a settled state of things, but the reckless misrule of Malhār Rao brought upon him the wrath of the British Government. He was deposed (1875) and the present Gaekvāḍa was selected to succeed him. During the early years of H. H. Sir Sayajirao's rule, distinguished diwans, like Sir T. Madhava Rao and Manibhai Jasbhai, gave to the state an efficient and advanced form of government. And, except in civic and political consciousness, the Gujarātīs of the Baroda State have not since been allowed to lag behind the residents of the British districts.

The states of Kāthiāvāḍa and Kaccha, though not contiguous to the British districts, were governed for a long time by a brilliant race of Gujarāṭi administrators, of which Sir Prabhashaṅkar Pattani is the eminent representative to-day. It inherited old traditions of Indian statesmanship, combining power of organisation with an outlook easily adjustable to modern exigencies. In spite of frequent wrangles and perpetual mutual distrust, these administrators maintained a sense of unity among themselves, introduced a progressive system of government, and built up a great tradition which serves as the only constitutional bulwark against the irresponsibility of rulers. They did not allow the political dissection of Gujarāṭa to interfere with its cultural unity. Many princes, too, have co-operated in this noble work.

III

In 1687 the East India Company transferred its seat from Surat to Fort Bombay; and the shipping industry and the trade for which Surat had been pre-eminent in the Mahomedan period, began to drift towards the new capital. To Bombay, flocked adventurous spirits from all parts: shippers, merchants, middlemen from Surat, Broach and Cambay; bankers and commission agents from Ahmedabad; enterprising traders from Kāthiāvāḍa and Kaccha. The opening of the Suez Canal and the discovery of engine-driven shipping immensely enlarged the scope of their commercial activities; and, in course of time, they built up the greatness of Bombay as an entrepôt and the principal market of the East. In the fifties, Premchand Roychand, originally from Surat, figured as a Colossus in the important cotton markets of the world; and his failure in 1863 had its repercussions in more than one country. The diwans of Kāthiāvāḍa and Kachha came there to settle their policy and to deal with the Government of Bombay. Aspiring students from all parts of the province came to study in its schools, its colleges, its University. The lawyer, the doctor and the literary man found in it a land of promise. And the modern Gujarāṭi culture which they evolved spread throughout the province, reshaping and unifying all aspects of life.

In Bombay, the West met the East. In those days the West, as represented by officials and businessmen, did not entrench itself behind racial exclusiveness. It was represented also by the British clergymen and teachers whose high-souled humanity hoped to set Indians on the path of progress. They had little racial arrogance, or, perhaps, less occasion to show it to those who sought inspiration from them.

With unwonted generosity, the Court of Directors of the East India Company, in 1752, recommended to the Government of Bombay that charity schools, principally for the children of soldiers, should be established. But little was done till 1814, when Archdeacon Barnes, with the support of Government and the public, founded 'The Society of Promoting the education of the Poor within the Government of Bombay'.

Under the Moguls, education was widespread in India. In many parts of the country, there was scarcely a village without at least a pāṭhasāla, a tol, or a madressa. The children of the well-to-do were generally taught at home. The purāṇika and the gāgariā bhaṭas also represented a system which imparted education to the public orally. The Brāhmaṇas and other classes from which the officials came were highly educated. Men and women of the upper classes had a general knowledge of business, ethics, mythology, and hygiene. But during the two centuries which followed the reign of Aurangzib, the combatants who ceaselessly scrambled for power in the country had no respect for culture. In consequence, the indigenous system of education was neglected. But, between 1820 and 1840, the Court of Directors ordered a survey of the condition of education in different provinces with a view to its improvement. This policy was intended solely to disarm the hostility of the higher classes of Indians to foreign rule by associating them in lower grades of administration. It ultimately took shape in the famous minute of Lord Macaulay on education.

In 1820, the society founded by Barnes, generally known as 'The Bombay Education Society', began active work. It opened four schools in Bombay, one in Surat, and one in Broach. In 1825, a branch of the society was formed for work in Gujarāta under the name of 'The Native Education Society'; and Bishop Carr, when on a visit to Broach, acquired for it the services of Ranchhodbhai Girdharbhai, (1803-1873), a young man who had picked up a little English. On behalf of the Society, Ranchhodbhai soon produced the first set of text books in Gujarātī and undertook the training of teachers in Bombay. The educational movement in Gujarāta for the succeeding thirty years was the life-work of Ranchhodbhai.

IV

In 1827, The Bombay Education Society commemorated the retirement of Mountstuart Elphinstone, the governor of Bombay, by raising a fund and founding the Elphinstone Institution in Bombay 'for teaching the English language and the Arts, Sciences and Literature of Europe'. In 1856 it was divided into the High School and College which have since been associated with his name. Many pioneers, including Dadabhai Naoroji, to whom we owe the birth of progressive movements in the country, received their education in this institution. Its students, bursting with fresh knowledge and enthusiasm, banded themselves into 'The Students' Society'; its Gujarātī section, styled 'Gujarātī Jñāna Prasāraka Maṇḍalī,' started a monthly magazine, Ganeana Parasāraka, the Disseminator of Knowledge, in 1849. In 1851 Gujarātī young men started yet another association, styled 'Buddhivardhaka Sabhā,' with Ranchhodbhai as president, and a monthly organ called Buddhivardhaka, the Augmenter of Knowledge. Associated with him were Mehtaji Durgaram Manchharam, Tuljaram Sukharam, Mohanlal Ranchhoddas, Mahipatram Ruparam. Sorabji Bengali, Ardeshir Moos and Nanabhai Ranina, the pioneers of education among the Gujarātīs, both Hindu and Parsi, were also members of this group. Karsondas Mulji, the social reformer, who exposed the immoral practices of the goswāmīs of the Vaishṇavas, also belonged to it. The adventurous Fardunji Marzbanji, (1787-1874) had as far back as 1822 started journalism on a prosperous career by his daily Mumbāi Samācāra, now The Bombay Samachar; and the increasing number of weekly and monthly journals afforded ample scope for the literary enthusiasm of this set. The ideas which actuated these young men cannot be better described than by the names of their magazines.

V

These enthusiasts wrote books, mostly elementary, on science and mathematics, history and biography. Ranchodhbhai, for instance, wrote the history of the Medes, the Persians and the Egyptians; Mahipatram and Nanabhai Haridas, later a judge of the High Court, a collection of biographies; Mohanlal Ranchoddas, a history of the Marāthās. Mehtaji Durgaram (1809-1878) had left Bombay in 1826 to settle in his native Surat. Though a Nāgara Brāhmaṇa by caste, he renounced orthodoxy and started a vigorous campaign against custom and superstition, social and moral evils, ghosts and miracles. He also wrote on science; started a tract publishing society, the 'Pustaka Prasāraka Mandali'; and organized a small band of co-workers. But the litho press which he wanted to instal in Surat met with a curious fate. The English Collector of Surat was an arrogant representative of the ruling race. When requested by the head master of the English school to examine the students in geography and grammar he exclaimed, " What? Geography and grammar to the Blackies!" This man would not allow Mehtaji to set up the press within the limits of the town. A mission press, no doubt, had worked in the town since 1817, but a press in the hands of a 'blackie' might, he thought, provide a weapon to attack the officials. Mehtaji however remained undaunted and set it up outside the town. In 1844 he organized 'Mānava Dharma Sabhā' for discussing problems of social reform.

In 1826 Tuljaram Sukharam, inspired by the new spirit, opened a school in Ahmedabad which was being awakened to modern conditions. In 1846 an English civilian, A. Kinloch Forbes, came there as assistant Judge. He studied Gujarātī, established contact with cultured men of the province, and, in 1848, acquired a friend and associate in Kavi Dalpatram Dahyabhai. Between them they collected old manuscripts, gathered tales of heroism from cāraṇas, and searched for archaeological and historical materials. Forbes wrote his Rāsamālā (1856), describing the vanished glories of Gujarāta with glowing sympathy. In 1848 he founded 'The Gujarata Vernacular Society' at Ahmedabad, and laid the foundation of its library with his manuscripts. The society acquired a fortnightly organ, Buddhiprakāśa, in 1850, and its own press in 1851. He was transferred to Surat, where he also founded a similar society and promoted a journal, Surat Samācāra, both of them, short-lived. On his retirement in 1854, his Gujarātī friends founded 'The Forbes Sabha' in Bombay to carry on the research work so dear to him. In his journal, Dāṇḍiō, Narmadashankar described him as 'a tulsī plant in a bed of opium'. He is, perhaps, the only British official who will always be remembered by Gujarātīs with affection and gratitude.

VI

Kavi Dalpatram Dahyabhai (1820-1898), a Śrīmālī Brāhmaṇa of Wadhawan, was the only great literary man of the time who did not owe his inspiration to 'The Buddhi Vardhaka Sabha'. He was influenced by the poetic traditions of the Swāmīnārāyaṇa sect. In 1855 he left government service to join 'The Gujarāta Vernacular Society' as an assistant secretary. Till he retired on pension in 1878, he raised funds and secured a permanent home for the society; collected manuscripts for it and edited Buddhiprakāśa; and composed numerous works in prose and verse. When he retired after 23 years of devoted service, the society gave him a pension of Rs. 20/- per month for himself and Rs. 4/- for each of his two wives!

For the character and work of 'Dalpat'—for so he has been styled by posterity—one can only speak with profound respect. He had very little English education. He never moved in the atmosphere of new ideas which surrounded the young reformers in Bombay. His contact with the West was limited to his personal observation and his relations with Forbes. And yet, throughout life, he remained a devoted and a broad-minded worker in the field of literature, reform and education.

His poetic works are collected in Dalpatkāvya. He wrote poems on ghosts and on the tyranny of the caste; on inter-marriage and widow re-marriage; against infant marriage and against evils of Hindu Society in general; against the share mania of 1865; on diverse moral, educational and social subjects; on the duties of students and on the future of Saurāshtra; on bugs, on tobacco, and on the cobbler's stone. Every middle aged Gujarāti remembers his verses on going to school, on an obstinate fly, and on a little wayward buffalow as his earliest stock of rhymes. He was the first to perceive the destructive effects of modern industry on Indian crafts and wrote his poem Hunnarakhānanī cadāi, The Invasion by Industry (1851), perhaps the first exposition of Swadeshism.

He wrote two plays. One was an adaptation of an English translation of Plutus by Aristophanes, the other was a farce, Mithyā-abhimāna, Vain-glory, (1867) satirizing the conceit of Jivaram Bhat, a night-blind village Brāhmaṇa. He also wrote, Forbes-vilāsa on the greatness of his patron, and Forbes-viraha, on his retirement. In Vijayavinoda he celebrated a poets' gathering held by Vijayasingh, the ruler of Bhavanagar. All the three are in a bardic vein,

He was a school-master who wrote nursery rhymes; a preacher who gave sermons on morality in verse; a journalist with the gift of writing off a leader on any topic in jingling couplets. His descriptions, at times, were full of crude humour. But he was not a poet; he had been brought up in an age which believed that whatever was set in rhyme was poetry. The technique and style of his poetry was of a by-gone age; and so was his prose, though fluid and simple. Except for a few homely garabīs, his works have little permanent value. He left behind a small band of admiring verse-writers, who, for some years, kept alive his literary tradition.

Dalpatram made the first attempt to place Gujarāti prosody on a scientific basis. Similar attempts with regard to the language were also made by Rev. Dr. J. V. S. Taylor, a fine Gujarāti stylist of the period, the author of Gujarāti Grammar (1867) and Dhātukosha, Etymological dictionary; and by Vrijlal Kalidas Shastri, the author of Utsargamālā, Etymology (1870) and Gujārātī Bhāṣhāno Itihāsa, the History of the Gujarātī Language, (1865).

VII

In 1885 the Government of Bombay reorganised the department of education and appointed a director at its head; in 1856 the Elphinstone Institution was subdivided into a college and a high school; in 1857 the University of Bombay was established. The transfer of India to the British Crown, after the Mutiny, thrilled the educated classes in the country with delight. Queen Victoria's generously worded proclamation had opened before them a vision of a free, great and glorious India. It was a decade of great events. The educated young Indians saw in England a saviour; and those who could, crossed the forbidden seas to visit Englishmen in their island home and learn in their schools and universities the secret of personal advancement and national welfare.

English literature proved an inspiration to countless young men in India. They turned to Scott, Byron, Macaulay, and John Stuart Mill, and to the histories of Greece, Rome and England, with hope and enthusiasm. They were encouraged in their efforts by their English professors, who saw in the spread of their culture a new hope for mankind. Such men formed 'The Buddhi Vardhaka Sabhā' in the forties and fifties; they were no longer schoolmasters in embryo but pioneers of revolutionary ideas.

Young Narmadashankar Lalshankar (1833-1836), who founded the Sabha, in 1851, was the most ardent of them. He was a Nāgara Brāhmaṇa of Surat. But an infant wife was fast attaining puberty, and custom peremptorily demanded that the seventeen-year old husband should leave his studies at the Elphinstone Institute and go to Surat to discharge his marital duties. The little wife died in October of 1853, and he returned to Bombay to resume his studies at the Institution, and was soon absorbed in the study of history and English literature.

Narmad, as he is called, was soon the hero of the Buddhivardhaka group. He was impressionable, full of tempestuous moods, egotistic, courageous and eloquent, and soon found the programme of his friends to usher in an era of enlightenment by education and propaganda, too tepid for him. He acquired a faith in revolutionary conduct and dedicated himself to it. He gave up his employment, and, on 23rd November 1858, in a melodramatic mood resolved to live a free man in the service of the goddess of learning.

On this day I came here, and looking at my pen, with tears in my eyes, I said "From now, I place my head in your lap".¹

Since that fateful day, a bitter struggle with want began for him, made more grim by a generous disposition and a fastidious temper. His father, till his death in 1864, gave him some assistance. Numerous friends and admirers often provided allowance for him. He made, for those days, a good income out of his literary activities and tuitions. Yet he was in chronic want: and the story of his meal of parched rice and milk became a heroic tradition. For about two years (1882-1885) he was driven to accept service, but with a heavy heart. He left it to die in poverty the next year.

He defied restraint of every kind. From early life, he sought the temporary inspiration which conquest over women brings. He married again in 1856. A little later, he took to himself a widow of his own caste, and was ex-communicated for so doing. But the ban was somehow removed. But, again, he gave shelter to another widow, married her in 1869, and was once for all excommunicated. He spent his days between hope and disappointment, born of his egotism and uncontrollable sex instinct. His love affairs threw a fascination around him, and contributed the sensual element to his poems. He wore social persecutions proudly, even ostentatiously, like the robe of a martyr's office. His romantic temperament and his great literary services drew around him many friends and admirers.

Narmad was not merely a literary man; he was an apostle of revolt. His romanticism was but an aspect of his faith in human dignity and freedom. The supreme moment of his life came in August 1860 when, on the question of widow remarriage, he entered the lists against 1 Māri Hakikata.

NARMAD

Goswāmī Jadunāthji, who, as god Kṛṣṇa on earth, wielded absolute power over the lives and minds of men. Accompanied by an athlete friend, he attended a meeting of paṇḍitas and bigots, presided over by Jadunathji, and at the risk of his life, challenged the divine authorship of the scriptures.

For a moment, the world trembles; the firmament crashes. This Nagara Brāhmaṇa has spoken what none has heard of, none ever imagined.

An age is at an end: the chains fastened by the ancients are broken. Human beings acquire an empire over their own hearts.

The debate comes to an end. As he came, so he stalks out of the meeting, a lion amongst men, proud, unconquerable. Friends and enemies look upon him as if he was a demon who had set fire to the dome of the world in a fury of destruction.

Even *Satyaprakāśa*¹ does not approve of this step, holds it to be thoughtless. A mistake it was, it said, to admit the reformers to be atheists. In the most glorious moment of his life, the hero of Gujarāta stood alone, forsaken by all. And only when he died, his castemen disregarded the fiat of ostracism so far as to carry his corpse to the burning ground.²

VIII

Narmad tried to consolidate and conserve the literary wealth of Old Gujarātī. He collected manuscripts and edited the works of some old poets then known to few, gathering valuable information about them. He composed Pingalaprakāśa, Gujarātī prosody (1857); Alaṁkāra-praveśa (1858), Rasapraveśa and Nāyikā-vishaya-praveśa, favourite subjects with Samskrta and Vraja poets. Single handed, he prepared and published the first Gujarātī dictionary, Narmakośa (1873), a work which for sixty years has retained its authority and value. He also compiled Narmakāthakośa, a dictionary of mythology. His miscellaneous prose works were first collected in Narmagadya (1865), and his poetical works in Narmakavitā (1866), and subsequent writings were added from time to time their later editions. Dharma-vicāra (1885) was published as a separate work. He also wrote Draupadidarśana, and an autobiographical fragment Mārī Hakikata.

In the beginning of the nineteenth century, the Parsis, the first to take to journalism, had used the Gujarātī

1. The organ of social reform edited by his friend Karsondas Mulji.

2. Munshi, Narmad, Aravācinomān Ādya, (Guj.)

adopted by them from the lower classes of the Surat district. Ranchodbhai had considerably improved it. But the active influence of English, which had been the medium of higher education and official intercourse, soon vitalised it. The members of 'The Buddhivardhaka Sabhā' felt the impulse of a new life through the study of English literature. More often than not, they maintained their intercourse with friends in English. And when they resorted to their own language for propaganda or literary effect, they made an unconscious use of the modes of expression, the figures of speech, the words and idioms, and even the structural peculiarities of English. These pioneers recoiled at first from a use of Saṃskṛta expressions which, in their preference for English, they considered pedantic.

They were, however, bitterly opposed by the other schools of authors, who, rooted in the ancient Brāhmanical learning, were not disposed to disregard their beloved Saṃskṛta. They studied the West only to be re-confirmed in their faith in ancient India. They strove to make Gujarātī a rich and plastic vehicle by a free resort to Saṃskṛta. Manasukhram Suryaram Tripathi (1840-1907), the author of Astodaya, Fall and Rise, was a great exponent of this view. His attempt to weed out every non-Saṃskṛtic word and idiom and Saṃskṛtize Gujarātī was as impossible as to run the Ganges up the Himalayas. But his was the voice of the genius of the language.

When Ranchodbhai began to use Gujarātī prose the elements in the vocabulary ranked as follows: (1) old tadbhava, or words formed from Saṃskṛta; (2) deśya, words of non-Saṃskṛtic origin; (3) old tatsama, or Saṃskṛta words used in their original form; (4) and Arabic, Persian or Urdu words. The adjustment of the rival tendencies which can be traced in Narmad's works from 1852 to 1885 followed different lines. (a) The old tadbhava and deśya elements were displaced by their Saṃskṛta equivalents; (b) elements of Persian and Urdu origin were progressively eliminated; (c) English words were used for things which came into vogue with the British rule; (d) Saṃskṛta equivalents were used for English words representing feelings, concepts and thoughts;

(e) new tadbhavas were formed; (f) and the meaning of English sentences was reproduced by Saṃskṛta expressions rather than a literal rendering or a roundabout paraphrase. In this process words assumed new meaning, and grammar and syntax were considerably affected. If the prose of Dharmavicāra (1885) is analysed the elements appear in a different order altogether: (1) tatsama, (2) tadbhava, old and new, (3) English, (4) deśya, Arabic, etc., Narmad, thus, was the father of modern Gujarātī prose. He found it a feeble vehicle of expression and left it a language of great promise.

The essay, borrowed by Nārmad from the early Victorian essayists of England, was his favourite form of expression. His essays, inspired by a vivid imagination and written in a rhetorical style, laid the foundation of modern prose literature. Following the lead of Mehtaji Durgaram and Dalpatram, he at first dealt with social reform. But he was a miniature encyclopædist, and ranged over literary criticism, biography, politics, history and mythology. He planned a panoramic history of the world under the heading Rājyaranga, The Epic of States, but could only execute a few fragments. They form the first attempt to write romantic history and contributed to the growth of historic sense in the literature.

IX

Poetry, in the hands of Nārmad, broke all its old fetters; it became ego-centric, declamatory, and melodramatic. It spent itself in attempting a change of form, texture and diction, but without achieving artistic results. His two poems on the condition of widows, Vaidhavyacitra, Widowhood-A Picture (1859-63) and Vidhavā-vreha, A Widow's Bereavement, shocked many, and provoked not a few to interest themselves in this vexing problem which defied solution in spite of growing sympathy for its unfortunate victims,

His Vanavarṇana (1862) and Pravāsavārṇana (1862) are highly descriptive poems by an ardent lover of nature. In Rtu Varṇana, The Description of Seasons (1861), the poet tries to express a passionate, young lady's feelings with modern vehemence and mediæval imagery. Shorn of its obscene passages, it possesses some poetic value.

His love poems lack refinement. He wrote stirring poems on the historic greatness of Gujarāta and on the departed glory of Surat. In a poem full of passion, Hinduo-ni-Padati, The Down-fall of Hindus (1864), he passionately declaimed against the causes which led to degeneracy in his community.

Low, indeed, has she fallen, this Motherland of Hindus. She has lost all power. In shame, she hangs down her head.¹

And he impetuously asks :

Where has gone the love we bore it ? And where, the pride we felt in it ?... A country will never rise without patriotism ; without it, it is but a wilderness, frightful and devouring. People have no political unity ; the bonds of the caste divide them ; they are in the very jaws of the tiger. ²

This feeling drove him to study the rise and fall of nations and, in their light, to contemplate its past and future. Hope came to him.

Once the day was there : now is the night : again the sun will rise.

And he sees the mists unrolling :

Hail, Hail, glorious Gujarāta ! Hail ! Hail, glorious Gujarāta ! The rosy dawn shines again. The saffron-coloured banner will fly again, inscribed with love and valour. For, your soul is lofty.

The glory that was Anāhīlvāda, and the greatness that Sidhharāja Jaysinhā achieved will return soon, Mother, in still more glorious hue. I see the omens : the night is gone : mid-day is nigh : men rush forward along with Narmad.³

1. हिंदु देशना हाल, थया छे भुंडा आजे
सत्ता मोटी खोइ, नीचुं ते जोए लाजे.
2. देश प्रीत हंकार, छुपां सूतां कहां आजे ?

* * *

बिना देश अभिमान देश उत्कर्ष न थाये ;
देश रान समशान, जेहवो खावा धाये.
राज समंधी ऐक्य, नथी अहिना लोकोमां ;
जाति बंधनो खुब, जनो बाधोना मोमां.

3. जय जय गरबी गुजरात !

जय जय गरबी गुजरात !

दीपे अरुण परभात,

ध्वज प्रकाशसे झळझळ कुसुंबी, प्रेमशौर्य अंकीत ;

He began an epic in a new metre, but left it incomplete. The political freedom of India captured his imagination, and, in addition to stirring poems on patriotism, he composed a lament, Riponviraha, on Lord Ripon's retirement from the viceroyalty.

He had the romantic temperament: free movements of the imagination, a deep-seated horror of conventions, an inveterate tendency to exaggeration. He believed in the dignity of man; in the right of man to fight and struggle and love as he wished; in the divine right of the literary artist to be a law unto himself, to sally forth in quest of beauty on untrodden paths. He asserted the poet's right to be subjective in expression, if and when he chose. He made frantic efforts to sing of things and situations which he thought beautiful. But artistic beauty always eluded the embrace of the poet whose egotistic temperament incessantly drove him to adopt mock heroic attitudes. The homilies in verse which his predecessors called poetry, gave place to wild declamation, to battle-cries, to verbal onslaughts in rhyme; only, they were characterized by a spirit of adventure, a desire to unravel mystery, and an audacity to do heroic deeds.

Come on, every one of you, and win the battle. The bugles are sounding. Onwards, Onwards! Fling yourselves in the fray; victory awaits you. Boldly, Columbus fared forth to find a new world; boldly, Napoleon warred with the whole world. Boldly, break the fetters of the caste; boldly, go to foreign lands. Fear not.¹

तुं भणव भणव निज संतति सउने, प्रेमभक्तिनी रीत—

उंची तुज सुंदर जात.

* * *

ते अणहिलवाडना रंग,

ते सिद्धराज जयसिंग;

ते रंग थकी पण अधिक सरस रंग, थशे सत्वरें मात,

शुभ शकुन दीसे मव्याह शोभशे, वीती गइ छे रात—

जन घूमे नर्मदा साथ,

जय जय गरवी गुजरात.

1. सह चलो जीतवा जंग, व्युगलो बागे,
या होम करीने पडो, फतेह छे आगे.

He sought unexplored forms and subjects. He tried every form of literature. He ransacked the Purāṇas, old literature and old history for new themes.

Through his journal, Dāṇḍi, The town-crier, Narmad poured a stream of lava, burning or scorching all things rooted in convention. The audacious challenge, which he flung at the old society, aroused his younger contemporaries. Defiance of religious and social forms followed. But the old order, entrenched behind custom and caste, answered the challenge with less defiance but greater effect. The reformers were held up to horror as lost souls; were scoffed at in gossip and scandal, in song and play. The trousered fop with the unfamiliar growth of hair on his head and cigar in his mouth and the educated woman with the shameless effrontery of shoes on her feet, formed the butt of universal ridicule. The elders also wielded social ostracism, the formidable weapon of Hindu society, with frequency. The consequences were terrible. The condemned could not secure a house in any decent locality. His family disowned him. Even his wife left his leprous company. In life, he had no one to turn to; and, in death, he was denied even the solace of having his mortal remains carried to the holy burning-ground and set fire to by his relatives.

When his comrades made compromises with orthodoxy and deserted him, he alone remained the butt of social fury—a tragic, lonely figure; and his faith in reform was shaken. As he toiled strenuously at his self-appointed task, he turned to the study of history, of Hindu institutions, and of Āryan culture; and the West in him was assimilated to the East. Dharmavicāra, Reflections on Religion, represents this stage in his evolution. His revolutionary zeal to destroy the old order first gave place to an honest doubt. Was he right in seeking to destroy a world which he had omitted to study, and which had stood the test of time? And his

साहसे कोलंबस गयो, नवी दुनियामां,
साहसे नेपोल्यन भीड्यो, युरप आखामां.

× × ×

साहसे ज्ञातिना बंध, कापि झट नांखो ;
साहसे जाओ परदेश, व्हीक नव राखो.

impetuous temperament soon carried him to the opposite extreme. 'He was a hero, and he attempted a social revolution. He was a seer, and he saw the secret which underlay his national culture. And he became a link in the endless chain of Gujarātis who have, from times immemorial, assisted Gujarāta in absorbing foreign culture and evolving its own'.¹

With Narmad's recantation of the revolutionary gospel, the school which favoured an immediate and wholesale destruction of the old order came to an end.

Narmad came to destroy what he thought was a phantom of the past, but remained to worship the beauty which was ever-living. Mansukhram, who believed that the fetters alone formed part of its majesty, lived to see the grace, born of freedom, preserving its beauty. By their joint efforts they succeeded in unveiling the harmony and beauty of a renaissance, which stood for a new life, a new expression, a new vision. This process had a two-fold aspect: first, restoring contact with the fundamentals of Āryan culture; second, removing the protective walls with which their fore-fathers had defended life and culture against religious fanaticism and political chaos.

A search for the secrets of past greatness is, for the creative mind in India, only a step forward towards an absorption of the foreign elements in modern life and a triumphant re-assertion of the fundamental outlook of the Āryan culture. In old days, the Brāhmanas, to facilitate this course, had invested the Vedas, the Purāṇas and the Saṁskṛta literature with sanctity. The modern Gujarātī mind went to the same sources, but, being more critical, it traced the sanctity not to the word but to the spirit.

The second aspect of the process achieved more substantial results. The castes were not destroyed, nor was orthodoxy uprooted, but both became sufficiently elastic to stimulate vitalising processes. The dominant note of the age was transformed. Akhā's gospel of death gave place to a new faith which exulted in the joy of life. Other-worldliness no longer exercised the weird fascination over men which once it did.

1 Munshi, Narmad, Kētākā Lekho.

Dalpat was the last to echo Akhā's world-weariness: "The world is a boundless ocean, full of misery." He admonished man thus: "You were born, no doubt, but— you never searched for the truth. Bewildered, you wandered in the maze and gathered your load of sin". But Narmad's motto was 'Love and Valour', and he loved life. He dubbed a man who had no desire to see new things and live in new ways 'a living corpse'. He called upon everyone to assert his right 'as a man in the very thick of the fight.' He was determined 'to go forward with victory', indifferent even 'if the heavens fell, and the earth broke into pieces'. He preferred 'death to dishonour', and was full of 'the wine of courage'. Life was to him full of adventure, victory and joy. Death had no terrors for him. 'Death and birth are but the laws of life. Never loose heart and be firm'. And this note came to dominate not only literature but life. The spell which five hundred years of self-protective instinct had woven round Gujarāta was broken.¹

And with hope thus regained, woman as the source of life and love re-acquired her rightful place in the world. Dalpat and Narmad and Ranchhodbhai all rushed to accord her recognition, to fight for her, to invest her with human dignity and charm. Rtūvarṇana presented her for the first time as a human being with a right to love. He sang: "The root of all reform is woman. Her rights are equal to man's, no more, no less." Woman was no longer the chattel, the curse of life, the gateway of hell. Polygamy, in consequence, disappeared from the higher castes. Pure bhakti, the emotion which sprang from sublimated sex-instinct, as in a Narasiṅha Mehtā, was decomposed into its components, love and reverence. And as love sought its natural object—a member of the other sex,—reverence, undefiled, came to be offered to the divine.

For the first time in Gujarāta Narmad boldly confessed his love for his beloved.

1 Vide, Munshi, Arvācīna Sāhityo Pradhāna Svara in Ādivacano p. 75.

Maiden dear, by your love, you drove me mad. I gave up study and money, too. All I left, only to repeat your name. I forgot the world; I was overpowered with love. As I looked at your face I danced with joy.¹

X

In Navalram Laxmiram (1836-1888), Narmad had a friend and associate who carried on his traditions on more judicious lines. His works are collected in two volumes styled Navalgranthāvali (1891), Vols. I and II. His England-no Itihāsa, published posthumously, is the first independent history in the language. He adopted Moliere's comedy, from Feilding's version, under the name Bhaṭa-nu Bhopalu (1867), The Bhata's Exposure. Viramati (1869) is a historical play typical of the period. His Kavi Jivana, the Life of the Poet, is a biographical sketch of Narmad. It exhibited a soundness of judgment difficult to preserve in assessing the life and work of a man like Narmad. From about 1867 he began to publish his literary and critical essays, and created a tradition of literary criticism in the language. For a first attempt, his method was characterized by sobriety and sympathy. He made every work he criticised a basis to indicate lines of further progress. Neither snobbery nor one-sidedness ever marred his criticism. He was a school-master turned literary critic, always encouraging, conscientious and enlightening. He could be severe when he chose, but he never had the heart to scotch a rising author for an attempt however poor. His prose was pure and dignified; an advance on Narmad's. In spite of his trenchant attack on Mansukhrām's attempt at Samskr̥tization of the language, he used Samskr̥ta words with effect, and, what is more, without effort.

1. बाहाली तैं धेलो कीधो रे, प्रीत जुवन्ती.

भणवुं, गणवुं, रळवुं सीधुं, छोडी में तो सहु दीधुं

तारुंज नाम लीधुं रे.

संसारने हुं भुल्यो, प्रीतडी रसे फुल्यो

नीहाळी मुखडुं झुल्यो रे.

XI

After the fourteenth century, Gujarāta had no stage and no dramatic literature worth the name. Episodes mostly from Kṛṣṇa's life were crudely staged at religious fairs or in Vaiṣṇava temples, under the name of rāsaliḷa, by strolling players. The bhavāis, performed in the villages, were rudimentary comic theatricals, hideous with gross acting and reeking with ribaldry. And Dalpatram's attempts in this direction were little influenced by the dramas of the West.

But admiration for Shakespeare brought a Shakespeare Kāthā Samāja in existence; and one of its leaders, Ranchhodbhai Udayaram, (1838-1923) ventured into this field. He published his Jayakumāri in 1861. It was the first modern love-story in the language with an educated girl as a heroine, and caught the fancy of Gujarāta. Subsequently, he wrote many plays on Purānic and social subjects, some of which were staged by the Parsi theatrical companies which had then begun to attract public attention in Bombay. But his best play was Lalitāduḥkhadarśaka (1864). The heroine, a cultured girl, married to an illiterate rake, after passing through terrible social and emotional trials, was driven to seek relief in death. It literally took Gujarāta by storm. Men and women shed tears at the tragedy; the husband's name, Nandan, passed into the language as a synonym for a heartless rake. But Ranchhodbhai's plays were didactic stories with long nerveless dialogues, interspersed with song, the only merit of which was their novelty.

Other forms of literature were also attempted by the pioneers of the new movement. The study of Scott's novels had its effect on the new authors. Mahipatram Rupram, (1829-1891) the first to write biography, wrote Vanarāja Cāvaḍo (1881) and Sadhrā-Jesang round two striking historic figures. Nandashankar Tuljashankar's (1835-1905) Karāṇa Ghelo (1868) dealt with the betrayal of Gujarāta by Karāṇa Vāghela's minister Mādhava. For so early an attempt at historical fiction, it was a notable performance. Its style and plot made it for long the only outstanding performance in this branch of literature. An excellent attempt to explore the resources of folklore was made by Framji Bamanji in his Gujarāta and Kāṭhiāvāḍa Deśa-nī vato (1875).

Hargovandas Kantavala's (1844-1931) poem, Paṇipata (1867) has some stirring passages. His novel Andheri Nagari-no Gardhavasena, the Donkey of Darktown, (1881) is noteworthy for two reasons. By a predominant use of deśya and old tadbhava words, the author registered a revolt against the new tendencies in the language. He also tried to give a realistic picture of misrule in Indian states. Both efforts were original but unsuccessful. Deśya elements in the language had no enriching properties; and Realism, without a leaven of Romanticism, sank into vulgarity.

The most artistic attempt at writing fiction during the period, however, was made by Jehangir Ardeshir Talyarkhan. His Ratnalaxmī (1881) and Kulīna ane Mudrā (1884) were written in the choice Gujarātī of the period. The latter written under the influence of Meadows Taylor is the first novel in the language which throbs with life, and is a great advance on Karaṇa Ghelo. The characters are human beings; the plot develops naturally; and the historical background, the wars of Tipu Sultan with the Company, are well-drawn. The author is out to tell a story, and tells it well. But Govardhanram's Sarasvatichandra, an incomparably greater work in all respects except in the art of story-telling, obscured the superior technique of Talyarkhan.

XII

In Ahmedabad, Bholanath Sarabhai (1822-1886), was breaking yet one more chain which bound Old Gujarāta. He was rich and cultured, had studied law and been a sub-judge. And when the influence of the Brahmo Samāja reached Ahmedabad, the conscience of this devout worshipper of the goddess Ambā awoke to a purer worship of the Formless Absolute. He joined the Prārthana Samāja, founded in 1871 by Mahipatram Ruparam, and burst out into psalms, rich in prayerfulness, which struck a note different to the bhakti, laden with sensuality, which was in vogue so long. In a sense his Īśvara Prārthanā Mālā (1872) is a landmark in the cultural history of Gujarāta. Prayer, for the first time in centuries, lost its sex-coloured tinge, lifting its voice in true humility.¹

XIII

Hindus and Parsis had combined to give birth to the early Gujarātī of 'The Jñāna-Prasāraka Maṇḍali,' though the early Parsi authors wrote on the Persian model. Furdoonji Marzbanji (1787-1874), the father of Gujarātī journalism, was a voluminous writer in prose and verse; so was Mancherji Kavasji Shapurji, known as Mansukh. But the Parsi authors, except for some notable exceptions, soon parted company, and engrafted on the literary Gujarātī of the fifties with which they were familiar, English words and derivatives of Gujarātī words which only their ignorance of the language could devise. In about three decades, they evolved the variety of the language known as Parsi Gujarātī.

1 Munshi, Thodāṅka Rasadarśano (Guj.), pp. 246-249.

CHAPTER II

THE SĀMSKR̥TIC REVIVAL AND ITS PIONEERS.

(1885-1914).

Political awakening—Nationalism—The University of Bombay—New Social adjustments—Govardhanram Madhavram Tripathi (1855-1907)—Sarasvatī-chandra Part I (1887)—A literary landmark—Part II (1892)—Part III (1898)—Part IV (1901)—Manilal Nabhubhai Dvivedi (1858-1898)—Sudarśana Gadyāvalī—Philosophic exponent of orthodoxy—Narsinhrao Bholanath Divatia (Born 1859)—Birth of new poetry—Kusumamālā (1887)—Smaranasamhitā (1915)—Manomukura (1924)—Smaranamukura (1922-23)—Sahitya-parishad.

The next literary period began about the year 1884 when the Indian National Congress first met, and ended about 1914 with the great war commenced. The dominant feature of the period was a revival of the influence of Āryan culture and Sāmskr̥ta. Old and new forces blended with each other, yielding fresh vigour and fertility. Romantism drawn from English and Sāmskr̥ta sources combined to vitalise literary outlook and technique.

I

This period saw the growth of a progressive urge for united political action in India. Local self-government, introduced in 1882, was hailed by the country as the coming of triumphant democracy. In 1884 Lord Ripon, the most beloved of British Viceroys, retired from office and left India. In 1885 the first sessions of the Indian National Congress was held at Bombay, the first formal expression of Indian national consciousness in modern history. Later, Dadabhai Naoroji's entry into the House of Commons and the first conviction of Lokamanya Tilak influenced the political outlook of Gujarāta. For a long time, Bombay, as the stronghold of Sir Pherozshaw Mehta and his group of politicians, controlled active political life in the province. But the Congress held at Ahmedabad in 1901 roused popular enthusiasm. In 1905 when Japan vanquished Russia with the weapons of the West, the victory was hailed by Indians as a triumphant challenge to the White domination of Asia. The agitation which followed the partition of Bengal fired Indian youth with the prospects of a struggle for freedom; and in the year 1906 Dadabhai Naoroji first placed the objective of Swaraj before the country.

A new force of tremendous potency had entered life. Swami Dayanand Sarasvati, a Gujarātī by birth, preached protestant Hinduism with a nationalistic bias under the name of Ārya Samāja. In Bengal, under Ramkrishna Paramhansa's influence, Swami Vivekanand expounded a Neo-Hinduism which laid emphasis on Karma Yoga as the only means of saving India. In Mahārāshṭra, Lokmanya Tilak leavened Hindu orthodoxy with an aggressive national programme. Thus, Hinduism began progressively to shed its religiosity to become Indian Nationalism. And Aravinda Ghose, who carried forward Vivekanand's traditions, preached to young India the fiery gospel of a militant nationalism with its political karma yoga, its cult of the Bhagavadgītā, and its programme of Swadeshism and the boycott of British goods. In 1907 the older politicians under Pherozshaw Mehta and Surendranath Bannerjee, and the younger under Tilak, Lajpatrai, the leader of the Arya Samaj, and Aravinda Ghose, came into conflict at Surat. The Congress was broken up. A wave of nationalism accompanied by an urge for political action, swept over Gujarāta as over other provinces of India, bringing into prominence the cult of Swadeshism (to use a popular catchword of the day) 'in words and deeds, thoughts and aspirations.'

II

The most effective agency of intellectual and cultural progress was the University of Bombay. Colleges sprang up at Bombay, Baroda, Ahmedabad, Bhavnagar and Junagadh. The Arts course was the most attractive in the curriculum of studies, and the English language combined with Samskr̥ta to exert a joint influence on the graduate. Samskr̥ta, the very embodiment of Āryan culture and tradition became a modern force of renewed vigour, at once a corrective of the old order and an inspiration for the new. It tempered Western influence and led the educated to a balanced attitude of mind.

In every town, university men as pleaders, doctors, teachers, or officials became active agents for distributing progressive ideas, and set the tone of social and moral life. Western culture came to be recognised as the necessary equipment for securing progress. A party of reformers sprang up in every caste. Railways, newspapers, and civic and political life began to destroy old barriers and prejudices. The uplift of woman became an accepted fundamental of the new outlook. The education of girls, though resisted by a few, was favoured by many among the educated. In advanced castes monogamy came to be the rule, polygamy the exception. Remarriage of widows was yet a dreaded heresy; but the public voice unanimously clamoured for alleviating their lot. Students returning from England began to be absorbed into the ancestral fold; and though mercilessly derided, lived to stimulate liberalising activities. Castes came to be looked upon as social institutions rather than eternal human compartments. Inter-dining between castes came into vogue imperceptibly. It was an age of peaceful adjustment; not school-masterly, nor revolutionary, as were the ages which preceded it, but wise in the way of compromise.

III

The three authors, Govardhanram Madhavram Tripathi, Manilal Nabhubhai Dvivedi and Narsinhrao Bholanath Divatia with which the new period began, were Nāgara Brāhmaṇas. The first two were brought up in an atmosphere of rigid orthodoxy, and were protagonists of Samskr̥tic revival in literature.

Govardhanram was a practising lawyer and a nephew of the formidable Mansukharam. His works are: Sarasvatichandra, a novel, Part I (1887), Part II (1892), Part III (1898), Part IV (1901); Sāksharajīvana (1899-1903); Līlāvatī Jīvanakālā (1905), a biographical sketch of his daughter; Dayārāmano Aksharadeha (1905), an appreciation of the poet of Dayārāma; Navajīvana (1891), a biographical essay on Navalram; and Snehamudrā, a poem (1889). He also wrote an essay in English, The Classical Poets of Gujarat (1892).

Part I of Sarasvatichandra is styled Buddhidhan-no Kārabhāra, The Administration of Buddhidhan. Sarasvatichandra, son of a rich merchant in Bombay and himself a young lawyer, is lost between sentimentality and intellectual restlessness. He is inspired by love for his fiancée, Kumud, but is afraid to fight for it. Instigated by his step-mother, his father reprimands him for his fondness for Kumud; and the hyper-sensitive young man leaves home and bride to embark on an aimless journey under an assumed name. On his disappearance, the sweet and accomplished Kumud is married to the stupid and dissolute son of Buddhidhan, a high official in Suvarṇapura. Curiosity to see how Kumud reacts to her new situation drives the hero to visit Suvarṇapura under the name of Navinchandra. Once he is there, accident brings him into contact with Buddhidhan, whose hospitality he accepts. His identity, however, remains undetected.

Buddhidhan is a statesman of the old school, highly practical, but not devoid of idealism. He has raised his friend Bhupsinh to the gādī of Suvarṇapura and is carrying on extensive intrigues to remove the old minister, Shathray, from office. Ultimately, he succeeds in tricking Shathray out of office after the approved fashion of old Kāthiāvāḍa. The intrigues are narrated hurriedly and in disregard of their dramatic possibility. The easy going proclivities of Shathray's womenfolk provide some spicy situations entirely unrelieved by romance or humour.

The central theme is simple but elaborately worked out. The lovers meet under the roof of Buddhidhan. Sarasvatichandra's presence in the house makes Kumud, whom he has forced into an unhappy marriage, doubly wretched. Tragic in her dignity and self restraint, she seeks him at midnight to make a last appeal not to waste his life in aimless wandering. Her pathetic struggle with herself is the great feature of the book. Her appeal in verse runs thus :

The water which once rose to the sky has returned to the earth: the happiness of the unlucky is foredoomed to an early end. For a moment, it looked glorious, just when it shone with the reflected hues of the flying eagle. No wonder that the glory was short-lived. But, lordly eagle, yours is to soar in high heavens. Fly away from the earth to which you have come: This is the land of the unwinged. Flutter your golden pinions : Rise to the clouds in wheeling grace ; Fly across the heavenly expanse : Plunge into the glistening waters of the sunshine. Flying high on mountain-tops, among clouds, in the sky, the splendour of your golden wings will mingle with the flaming rays of the sun. Then we will look at it from the earth, worship it joyfully. I cannot fly myself. Leave me, I pray, my one solace to see you soar on high. If you don't, alas, nought but tears will be left for me."

But when she comes into the room, Sarasvatichandra pretends to be asleep. However, he permits her to take some verses out of his hands. They indicate his attitude.

Shall I let her weep? Friend, I, a stranger, dare not wipe the tears of my beloved, and cannot see them shed. My noble love ! You have lived through untold sufferings. But forget the unforgettable. Submit to the decrees of fate, I am now irresponsible, moving about in changing guise. I am like the roving butterfly ; I will wing myself at will as the birds do ; I will live as do the waves of the sea. Neither high nor low, will I move ; my flight will be like the clouds, unsupported and aimless."

She begs of him to go back to life. He replies by leaving Buddhidhan's house to resume his journey.

1. अवनिपरथी नभ च्छड्युं वारि पडे ज पाछुं त्यां ने त्यां :

हुंहुं कर्म हुंहुं रहेवाने सरजेछुं आ धरतीमां.

नभवच्चोवच रंगीन धातां गरुडराजनी पांख थकीं

सुभग घडिक ए वन्युं; नवाई न, ए दशा जो ना ज टकी.

पण उंचा नभना संचारी पक्षिराज, तुं आव्यो आ

धरतीपर त्यांथी उड पाछो; पक्षहीननो देश ज आ.

फफडावी पांखो सोनेरी, रच रसयंत्र तुं रसधरमां !

विशाळ व्योम मापी ले, ने न्हा सूर्यकिरणना सरवरमां !

गिरिशिखरे, घनमां, ने नभमां उंचो तुं उडशे ज्यारे,

सूर्यबिम्बथी सळगी उतरता कर-अंबर विशे ज्यारे.

सुवर्णपद्मनी जशे भभक भळी, ते समय तुज कीर्तिये

जोई जोई पृथ्वीपरथी पूजीशुं—उरभर्मथी अनुमोदीने.

नही उडाये पोताथी—पण प्रियनी विमानगति जोई

राचवुं एटलुं रह्युं भाग्य ते राख ! नीकर रहीशुं रोई.

2. रुवे ते देवी रोवा रे ! अधिकारी न ल्होवाने

प्रियानां आसु हुं, भाई;—न ए रहेवाथ जोवाई.

अहो उदार व्हाली रे ! टकावी देह राखी रे

न भुलतुं तुं भुली दे ! विधियुं धार्युं वेठी ले !

हवे स्वच्छंदचारी हुं ! यदच्छावेशधारी हुं !

The book was hailed by Gujarāta with great enthusiasm. Young men in college imbibed Sarasvatichandra's waywardness and sentimentality, and sighed over the loss of imaginary Kumuds. Families of culture named newborn girls after Kumud. Quotations were freely used in literature, speeches and private correspondence. Adverse comments of prudish critics were drowned in a chorus of praise. It was a landmark in the literature, the first great novel of real life in the language. Its prose, though a product of the Samskr̥tic tendency advocated by Mansukhram, was a rich medium for the new thoughts and feelings. Love, romance and adventure were artistically presented in a Gujarāti form to the growing reading public for the first time, and so also full drawn portraits of real men and women. And Gujarāta, which was swinging back to an appreciation of the old social order, saw it interpreted with great sympathy as a venerable structure to be viewed with reverence and altered with caution.

By this book the author desired, to use his words, 'to give an objective existence to all that was so sketched out in his minds's book.' The work sprang from experience. Its richness and flavour was drawn from Samskr̥tic influences, from Bāṇa and Māgha ; but its form, intensity and beauty, and its appeal were the result of the subjective attitude of the author moulded by the Romanticism of English authors, notably Shelley and Wordsworth, Scott and Lytton. It was essentially Gujarāti and truly modern ; a sign of the dawning renaissance. What is true of the first part of Sarasvatichandra is true of the whole modern Gujarāti literature.¹

पतंगो उडती जेवी-हवे म्हारी गति तेवी.
उडे पक्षिगणो जेम, हवे म्हारे जवुं तेम;
समुद्रे मोजुं रहे तेजुं म्हारे य छे रहेजुं.
नही उंचे-नही नीचे मळे आधार, घन हींचे
निराधार-निराकार;-हवे म्हारीय ए चाल.

1. 'The Sanskrit literature furnishes the soil and English literature the manure which have brought forth the plant of Modern Gujarati Literature.' Narsinhrao Divatia, Gujarati Language and Literature, p. 6.

Though the style, the technique and the sentiments of this work wove a spell round young Gujarāṭa for twenty-five years, it lacked humour, and displayed creative power limited both in scope and intensity. The language was stilted, pedantic, full of conceits after the fashion of Bāṇa. Quotations from English, Samskr̥ta and Old Gujarātī authors bristled throughout the book; verbose soliloquies, life-less dialogues and moral reflections marred the beauty of finely conceived situations. He was inspired by Romanticism, and yet shuddered at its exuberance and colour. His ideas of adventure rarely went beyond the confines of convention. He admitted love as a beautiful fatality, not a living law.

IV

But the moralist and the apologist out-grew the artist in Govardhanram when he wrote Part II of the work under the sub-title, Guṇasundarīnūn Kutumbajāla, The Family-world of Guṇasundari. This volume gives only two more incidents of the main story. Outlaws attack the party with which Sarasvatichandra had left Suvarṇapura. He is wounded, and is picked up by a travelling party of bāvās, ascetics, from the adjoining monastery of Suṇdaragiri. About the same time, Kumud, escorted by armed men, also leaves Suvarṇapur to see her mother. Her grandfather, Manchatūr, with another escort, comes to meet her on the way. The outlaws attack Kumud's party, but are surrounded by the escort, and disarmed. But Kumud, as she stands on the brink of the river, falls into it, and is carried away by the current.

In this volume the author found his style. It maintained a sustained richness throughout the book, and at places became lively. But the romantic element was submerged; the subjective intensity disappeared altogether; all effort was concentrated in detailed and often lifeless descriptions. The bulk of the volume was taken up with a full length portrait of Guṇasundari, the mother of Kumud, drawn in elaborate and charming details. She is the typical Hindu mother, noble beyond description, who has presided over the joint family in India from the earliest times; the link which binds its shapeless crowd; the source of its joy and the only solace in its endless sorrows. The relations between man and wife, mother and daughter-in-law and other members in a joint family inter se have been brought out with rare skill. This part registered a stronger reaction against the movement for reform than even the first. Many Gujarātis received it with enthusiasm; for, they saw in the art with which the picture of a Hindu joint family was drawn a fresh justification for a conservative outlook. But it was the swan-song of the old social order; in the very hour of its literary vindication, it was passing away.

V

Part III of Sarasvatichandra, styled Ratnanagari no Rājya-kārabhāra, the Political Administration of Ratnanagari, also contains very little of the main story. Sarasvatichandra is taken by the bāvās to their matha on Sūndaragiri, and is well received on account of his deep insight into Indian philosophy. In Bombay, his father, pines away for him and dismisses from his service Dhurtlal, his brother-in-law, whose evil influence had brought about the quarrel between father and son. His mother also regrets her folly, and wants him back.

In Suvarṇapur, the dissolute character of Pramaddhan, Buddhidhan's son, comes to light, and the family sympathises with the cruel lot of his wife, Kumud. After she leaves Suvarṇapur to go and meet her mother, Pramaddhan, in order to win sympathy, spreads a rumour that she has run away with Navinchandra. But he is found out; and out of shame, he suddenly disappears and is not heard of any more. Incidentally, Kusum, Kumud's younger sister, is introduced; and everyone about her begins to think how wonderfully she will suit Sarasvatichandra, only if he were found and could be induced to accept her as a wife.

The substantial part of the book is taken up with the early history of Ratnanagari, of which Vidyachatur, Kumud's father, is the minister. In the days of the East India Company, its ruler Nagraj, a lion-hearted Rajput, had fought the Company's forces bravely, but had ultimately accepted its proffered friendship. His son Mallaraj, brave and wise like the royal sages of the purāṇās, sighs :

To-day our kingdom has accepted fetters ; its heroism is gone ; we have put on cudjies-wooden wristlets-like women ; our wars have disappeared. As we protect women, so will the British protect us in the future.

He comes to the throne ; sees the spread of the Company's power over the land ; and during the Mutiny, acting on the advice of his wise Minister, Jarashankar, declines to side with Nana Saheb. The Mutiny is quashed ; the Crown succeeds the Company ; and the friend becomes the master. First, a political agent is appointed to keep peace between the states ; then, intrigues are fostered ; later, the doctrine of Paramountcy comes into existence ; and the fate of erstwhile kings is handed over to the whims of British military officers. At every stage, Mallaraj struggles against the tightening bond, mortified at the loss of his independence. But the astute Jarashankar advises submission to the inevitable.

Samant, the brother of Mallaraj, ultimately approves of the advice. But Samant's son, Mulraj, breaks with the chief Mallaraj and conspires with Rana Khachar of Virapura. He turns an outlaw, attempts to kill Maniraj, the prince, but is captured by the brave prince. Instead of being executed, as his loyal father would have it, he is only banished from the State.

Maniraj, while pursuing Mulraj, the outlaw, sees a shot fired by an unknown hand and goes in pursuit of the hunter. He discovers the hunter in Kamala, the fair daughter of Rana Khachar, and incidentally, saves her from an alligator. Both fall in love with each other. Kamala, after the traditional fashion of Rajputānis, gives herself away to him. Her father protests ; he is the old enemy of Mallaraj, and has no opinion of Maniraj either as a warrior or a statesman. But Mallaraj comes to the rescue. The two old enemies, dressed as pathans, repair to Maniraj's palace, and Khachar tests for himself the valour and astuteness of Maniraj. He is satisfied, and blesses the marriage of his daughter with the son of his old enemy.

Mallaraj dies. Maniraj at first declines to take the ādi. But the phantom of his father appears to him, and assures him that the British are the monkeys which formed the army of Rāma ; and that, with the blessings of Sītā, they are reborn in this age.

A new bridge of dharma is being built in our land. It will be formed of floating stones brought by the monkeys from across the seas If you run with the monkeys you will win ; if you do not, you will be left behind ; and, while running with them, if you fail, they will carry you on their shoulders.

And Maniraj thereupon decides to take the advice of the political agent to accept the gādī, murmuring Tennyson's lines :

And from the ruin arose
The shriek and curse of trampled millions, even
As in the time before ; but while I groaned,
From out the sunset poured an alien race
Who fitted stone to stone again, and Truth,
Peace, and Justice, came and dwelt therein.¹

The style shows little change. A considerable part of the book is taken up by long discourses and reflections, rarely rising above platitudes ; by learned quotations in three languages ; by poems improvised by many of the characters ; by a philosophic disquisition on the philosophy of the Defined and the Undefined, at one place almost a whole chapter being in Saṃskṛta.

In this book, we are wafted into an unreal atmosphere of a Utopia. Every one, except Dhurtlal, the blackguard, and Pramadhhan, the rake—who are also unreal—is inhumanly perfect ; mere abstractions. Ordinary sādhus on a hill in Kāthiāvāḍa discuss abstruse philosophic doctrines. Mallaraj, an old chief, and Jarashankar, his minister, are perfections, wise and saintly. Maniraj, a petty Indian chief of twenty-two, 'handsome, soft-featured and yet awe-inspiring', 'stalwart and strong as a Russian', is a saint in morals, a Vikrama in his dealings with his people, a savant who can quote Saṃskṛta classics and English masters. Kusum, the thirteen-year-old girl, is beautiful, bold and naughty ; is accomplished and can compose poetry ; can sing, dance and swim ; can be wise beyond her years and compliment Maniraj with a courtier's grace, and discuss with him the duties of kings, throwing in a quotation from the Mahābhārata into the bargain.

1. Akbar's Dream.

Sarasvatichandra is an elusive phantom living in day-dreams. In one such, he sees his friend Chandrakant and Kumud. He tells the dream-friend, "Chandrakant! Sweet philosophy buoys me up into the Heavens: I fly, effortless, like Dante in his Paradise." Kumud—the dream-girl—falls at his feet and says, "Thou hast no right to rise without me. Am I not the Beatrice whose visions fill thy soul and fly as thou fliest?" "Sweet Angel of purity," answers the hero "thou art, thou art. Fair ethereal spirit, Guide us into the higher regions. Thou shalt raise us all."

The nineteenth century is gilded with the golden hues of Purāṇic idealism. The effort was the outcome of discontent with the sordid present and a longing to see the ideals of the past become a reality in the future. Mallaraja is a Rājārshi; Jarashankar is a walking Shāstra; Maniraj is a prince from Dāsakumāracarita; Sarasvatichandra is a product of the Bombay University, no doubt, but removed from modern surroundings. He is 'transmigrated back into the body of some quiet and retired Ṛshi of antiquity'.¹ The living Romanticism of modern European literature is replaced by the emanciated variety of mediaeval kathās.

VI.

Part IV of the work, styled 'Sarasvatī-nun Manorāḍya;' The Thought-land of the Goddess of Learning, brings the series to a close. Sarasvatichandra temporarily accepts the discipleship of the head of the monastery at Sundargiri. A little away from the hill, where the river meets the sea, is a parallel settlement of bāvis, female ascetics, of the same sect. The bāvis recover Kumud from the river and revive her. The lovers meet each other, and cannot conceal their mutual attachment. The shrewd bāvās and bāvis come to know of their love and they obligingly arrange a meeting for the lovers. For three days and nights they live in two neighbouring caves, meet every night, talk love of the spiritual, or, rather, ultra-sentimental variety. And, thanks to the yogic powers of the head of the bāvās, they wander in their sleep into the land of siddhas, where they hold endless conversation on diverse topics with the dead, and with birds and beasts possessing allegorical significance. The lovers swear eternal love and companionship, but decide not to marry, evidently for no better reason than that Kumud is a widow.

1. The Preface in English.

Chandrakant, Sarasvatichandra's friend, finds out his whereabouts. Kumud's family is in distress at the lovers living with each other, and at the consequential possibility of their committing the terrible social sin of widow-remarriage. Kumud runs to their rescue. She goes to her sister Kusum, the prodigy, who has sworn eternal celibacy to the despair of her mother; and solicits her hand for her own lover, to whom, a few days ago, she has sworn to be a companion for life 'like unto a shadow; like unto Cūḍabodhini, the wife in duty; like unto the earth which revolves round the sun!' Kusum consents and is promptly accepted by Sarasvatichandra as his wife.

Even compared with Part III, this part is a failure as a piece of literary art. It has no plot worth the name. Its characters—even Kumud and Gunasundari—become unreal, floating in intellectualised verbosity. The lovers are mere mouth-pieces for uttering morbid sentimentality, which is made more unattractive by oft-repeated mutual encomiums and pious resolutions. The end is inartistic in the extreme. The only relieving feature is a short, living picture of Chandrakant's domestic life.

VII

Govardhanram dedicated his later life to Parts III and IV of this work. These twelve-hundred-odd pages were intended by the author to evolve a harmony out of 'the varied conflicts of life and thought at present visible all over India'; to bring about a fusion not only of the two civilizations of the East and West, but of 'far different ancient Indian civilization...the third element of the fusion'; and to point the way to the educated Indians, who constitute 'a median organism in this way between various other sets of complicated and contradictory organisms.'¹ This was the ambitious purpose of this prolix effort. He sought to achieve this purpose by presenting the results of life-long study and a deliberate attempt at maintaining intellectual balance on a background of thinly sketched romance. He failed to perceive that experience, presented as inter-related unity through the medium of creative imagination, is the only basis of the art of literature. And by this failure, he himself undermined the influence of the great tradition which Part I of his work had built up. But, being the only gifted novelist of his age, his failures became invested with prestige; were copied as models by smaller men; and continued to hamper the growth and appreciation of higher art.

1. The Preface in English to Pt. IV,

Extricated from a forest of conflicting views, from lengthy quotations, soliloquies, dialogues, and allegories, and from dissertations by mythical beings, his gospel of harmony is a disappointing one. Its social and religious aspect was already preached by Narmad in Dharmavicāra; only it was applied to diverse problems of life with a learning and logic which the earlier author did not command. In a soliloquy, in English, it is thus formulated.

We have never as much as attempted to find out the wisdom of our ancestors....I think there is more common sense and sounder patriotism in the stubborn and wholesale refusal, by our masses, to consider, or even hear and endure, the latest fantasies of their seduced boys (by the West).

Suffer, says the author, that the old may not be destroyed. Sacrifice a career to placate a father's temporary prejudice even if it costs love, prospects, and the life and happiness of a noble and innocent girl. The joint Hindu family is a blessing, though it looks a curse; 'an insurance against poverty, a fortress to resist the inroads of immorality, to be supported by patience and suffering for a generation of two'. Love is nice to swear by, to dream of, to write poetry about, but has no claims over life. It is a spiritual bond which can be broken to maintain social prestige, or forgotten in the tempting arms of a bride's younger sister. We miss in all this Narmad's respect for human personality, his love of righting wrongs, his urge to heroic action.

Govardhanram's political gospel is an expected counterpart of his social creed. Writing in the very midst of Dadabhai's disappointments and Tilak's heroic struggle, he retains a pathetic confidence in Englishmen. They will elevate the Indian States into 'self-governed dominions of the Empire'; they will look after Indian aspirations 'as if they were your kith and kin'! He has no ear for the prophecy of impending conflict which Narmad uttered in the seventies. He could not see any significance in the new technique of harnessing orthodoxy to modern politics, which Tilak was forging. All he could do was to parody, through his Virrao Dhampate, the great politician's speech and manners. The under-currents of rising nationalism, which were to burst out into a flood three years later (1904) had no existence for him, and the section of young Gujarātis over which he exercised literary fascination, remained blind to the new forces which were inspiring the youth in Bengal and Mahārāshtra.

But Sarasvatichandra rendered an invaluable service to the province. It brought to the Gujarātī reader choice sentiments, thoughts and ideas from Saṁskṛta literature, and provided him with an elaborate and interesting attempt to apply them to modern problems. It thus became a Purāṇa of Saṁskṛta revivalism. It has established, and will continue to establish, for generations a living contact between Gujarāta and ancient Āryan culture. And it will continue to hold fast the language to the richness of Saṁskṛta even in the hands of those to whom the beauty and inspiration of the original are inaccessible.

The author's other works, in style and execution, are very inferior. Snehamudrā is an obscurely written poem lightened up by stray poetic flashes, and is inferior in form and substance to many poems in Sarasvatichandra. Dayārā-mano Aksharadeha is a valuable appreciation of a great poet.

VIII

Manilal Nabhubhai Dvivedi (1858–1898) was a man of great learning and intellectual power. His principal works are his gazals after the style of the Persian Sufis, and other poems, collected under the name of Ātma Nimajjana; Kāntā a play (1884); Gulabsinh (1887); a novel being an adaptation of Bulwerk Lytton's Zanoni; Bālavilāsa (1893); Siddhāntasāra, (1899), a work dealing with ancient Hindu thought and modern problems; and numerous essays on literary and philosophical subjects collected in Sudarśana

Gadyāvali. His prose was more elastic than Govardhanram's, and was distinguished by a stately rhetoric. His sonorous sentences were piled up with great effect. With a judicious use of Samskr̥ta words he carried the language to great heights of eloquence. He gave a new turn to the essay; he made it a learned discourse, or an incisive polemic bearing down the reader's doubts by the combined force of reasoning and rhetoric. He was a great student of literature with a sure eye for literary beauty; and his robust and vigorous outlook imparted a new tone to criticism.

He stood out as the philosophic exponent of orthodoxy. The new was flimsy, unstable, soul-less, devoid of beauty. The old was built on firm foundations of self-discipline, on comprehensive vision, on the reality of Vedānta, on the unity of Yoga. The ignorant might attack it, the half-hearted might try to find its justification. But those who understood it knew its changeless essentials. And he did not say this with the partial knowledge of a paṇḍita; for, he had studied the thought both of the East and the West. And in no uncertain voice, he spoke to modern Gujarāta of the glorious heritage of Āryan thought, of its undying strength, of the ideals for which it stood. His message was 'No surrender to the West'; and many in Gujarāta heard in it the battle-cry of the future.

Balashankar Ullasram (1859-1898) adopted the poetic attitudes of Hafez and some other Persian poets and had a transient popularity. His work Klānta Kavi (1907) is a literary curiosity. Harilal Harshadrai Dhruva (1856-1896), the author of Kunjavihāra (1896), was a scholar and a poet. Some of his poems are still cherished, but more for their patriotic fervour than for their literary art, which was moulded on that of Narmad.

IX

But the most formidable figure of the period under survey is Narsinhrao, Bholanath Sarabhai Divatia's son (born 1859). His works include Kusumamālā, The Garland of Flowers (1887), Hṛdayaviṇā, The Heart's Lute (1896) and Nupura-jhankāra, The Jangling Anklets, (1914) being collections of odes and lyrics; Smaranasamhitā, The Song of Memories (1915), an elegy on the death of his son; essays mostly on literary topics, some of which are now collected in Manomukura, The Mirror of the Mind (1924), Abhinayakalā (1932), and Vivartakalā (1933), a work on histrionic art Premānandanā-nāṭako, The Plays of Premānanda (1909); Jodaṇī, Spelling (1905); Gujarati Language and Literature, Wilson Philological Lectures, Vol. I (1921) and Vol. II (1932), delivered in 1915 at the University of Bombay, being an exhaustive and scientific survey of the Gujarātī language Smaranamukura, The Mirror of Memory (1926), containing his reminiscences of some friends and relatives; and Vas sonji Madhavji Lectures (1930) delivered at the University. A poet, an essayist, a critic, a literary portrait-painter, a philologist, he has been in the front rank of our literature since his first work was published.

Kusumamālā, Hṛdayavinā and Nupura-Jhankāra contain poems, odes, sonnets and lyrics, reminiscent of English poetry of the age of Wordsworth and Shelley. About the time Govardhanram was writing the first part of Sarasvatī-chandra, Narsinhrao was bringing into existence a new poetry. For form, he went back to the vṛttas of Saṁskṛta prosody; for language, to a choice of Gujarātī words of accepted poetic value mixed with Saṁskṛta words; and he evolved a poetic medium of beauty. Accuracy and restraint of expression characterized every line. Poetry, for the first time, took to interpreting the beauty of a mood, a picture, a phenomenon of nature, impressing the commonplace in life and nature with an inner significance. There was a freshness of outlook in some poems; pensive sweetness in others; imagination and emotion lent charm to every one of them. Even the poem dealing with so common a subject in Gujarātī poetry as the condition of the hapless widow, was invested by him with such delicacy and emotion as to become, for the first time, a thing of art. With Kusumamālā, Narsinhrao began the age of romantic poetry in the language. Some others, coming after him, improved upon his art, but none, except Nanalal, has so far created a different tradition.

X

With the new atmosphere of later times and under the shadow of a great domestic affliction, the ripe powers of the poet produced, in 1915, his masterpiece, Smaraṇasamhita, one of the few great poems in the language. It is full of self-restraint and dignity. Artistic expression is clear as crystal and is reminiscent of the Sāmskr̥ta masters. A quiet, pensive sadness overshadows the poem from its very beginning.

The heart does not smile; for, to-day, I feel helpless. And yet it sheds no tear, though I am heavy with burden.

I do not like to speak, for my heart is weighted with muteness. But as the burden flows in words it grows lighter.¹

The poet is oppressed with despair.

On the chess-board of the world, life is but an unequal game; for, we play it against a Power, strong and yet invisible. Deluded, we believe the pawns as ours; but the Power takes them as It likes. We play new and yet newer moves to save them, but the hidden Power baffles us.²

Hope is gone.

The last remaining string of the lyre of hope is broken. Child! On your last string alone depended life.³

With the aid of philosophy and religion, he commences a search for his departed child. Helplessly he cries:

The door does not open, and my feet are sinking. Am I sinking in the mire? I know not. Religious fervour! Brother! Divine Faith! Mother

- (१) ना हसे उर माहरं, आज हुं लचार छुं ;
ना खवे उर माहरं, धारं अकथ को भार हुं.

× × ×

वाणी वदवी ना गमे, मूक भार वहुं उरे;
तदपि वाणीरूपमां, ए भार उर हलको करे.

- (२) जिंदगी आ जगपटे-वार्जी छे असमान ए ;
शक्तिसंगे खेलिये, अणदीठ ने बळवान जे.
मोहथी निज मानियां शोगटां जे आपणे,
शक्ति ते मन धारियां हा ! ले हरी वीजी क्षणे !

- (३) तन्तु ए अवशिष्ट हा ! तूटियो आशातणो,
बाळ ! तुज जे तांतणे आवार जीवननो गप्पो.

mine ! I sink deeper. Extend me a helping hand. Save me from sinking in the mire.¹

The poet searches for his beloved child.

In the lap of midnight, the stars twinkle. In the waves of the sea, thunder is heard as of the clouds. I see the stars ; I hear the thunder ; and they tell me of you. At every step I find your foot-prints. How shall I believe that you are not there ?²

Then, from star to star, in the moon and the sun, the poet looks for the child but in vain. Ultimately he finds the key ; the doors yield ; and he finds the voice of his son praying to the Merciful. The little prayer, simple and spontaneous, is a gem of faultless beauty.

Open Thy doors of joy. Oh Merciful ! Open Thy doors of joy. I have fast crossed the forest of life. Simple child as I am, I now stand at Thy door. Darkness is no more ; light shines before me. Take thy child to Thy heart, Oh Merciful ! Open Thy doors of joy.

Ceaselessly, fondly, I have repeated Thy sweet name. Now speak with Thy child with love. Thy child is now here ; he thirsts for the Divine. Shed on him the nectar of Thy love. Oh ! Merciful ! Open Thy doors of joy.³

The poet regains hope and faith, and meditates on life, death and God. But the artist never abdicates in favour of the metaphysician or the theologian. With a rare delicacy of feeling, he reminds himself of how Śṛgāla and

- (૧) ઝબડે નવ દ્વાર એ ; પાય મુજ નીચે સરે ;
 क्यां कळुं कळणमां ? मुजने खबर कंई नव पडे.
 धर्मबळ ! मुज बंधुओ ! दिव्य श्रद्धा ! मात ओ !
 कळणकर्दम डूबतो को रोकजो धरी हाथ ओ !
- (૨) મધ્યરજનિ—ઝછંગમાં તારલા ચમકી રહ્યા ;
 घोर सिंधुतरंगमां घन घोष कंई घुरकी रह्या.
 એ નિહાલું, એ સુણું, સુણું નિરખું ત્યાં તને ;
 पदपदे प्रत्यक्ष तुं, क्याम मानुं तुं नथी को क्षणे ?
- (૩) મંગલ મંદિર યોલો, દયામય ! મંગલ મંદિર યોલો !
 जीवनवन अति वेगे बटाव्युं, द्वार उभो शिशु भोळो ;
 तिमिर गयुं ने ज्योति प्रकाशयो, शिशुने उरमां ल्यो, ल्यो.
 दयामय ! मंगल मन्दिर खोलो !
 नाम मधुर तम रख्यो निरन्तर, शिशु सह प्रेमे बोलो ;
 दिव्य तृषामर आव्यो बालक, प्रेम—अमीरस ढोळो.
 दयामय ! मंगल मन्दिर खोलो !

Sandhyāvati sacrificed their children for the sake of the Divine. He does not merely like to submit to His will, but he wishes for something higher.

I want to join my will to the Lord's. True sweetness flows only when the two currents mingle.¹

He does not love discord, for universe is but the harmony of the Absolute.

Hidden indeed is the scheme of this music, so grand. One Divine Master alone leads the orchestra; and I am but a feeble human worm.

How dare I find fault with this divine music? How can I disturb its harmony?²

The poet's only wish is so to sing that his purest notes may harmonise with the eternal symphony. He thinks of death, and adversity. Are not the unhappy blessed? For their sorrows are counterbalanced by a single tear of a Buddha anxious to relieve them. But why was death created? The poet gives the answer, his interpretation of nature unobtrusively uniting with the sadness of his heart :

The brilliant orb of the Sun is overspread with a dark cloud. It is an unfathomable scene. And yet behind the cloud's dark shadow, the luminary flames in eternal splendour. Likewise, the dark patch of death breaks up eternity but only for a moment; beyond its darkness flows the splendorous sea of eternal life. In life's endless flood, death is but a bubble. Again and again the bubble bursts; and the sea surges ceaselessly.³

- (१) ईश-इच्छासंगमां भेलुं इच्छा माहरी,
वे प्रवाहो एकठा थातां मधुरता छे खरी.
- (२) गूढ छे कइं योजना भव्य ए संगीतनी,
एक योजक दिव्य ते संगीतनायक रहे बनी;
मन्द मानवकीट हुं दिव्य ए संगीतमां
दोष क्यम काडी सकुं ? क्यम भंग करुं स्वररीत्यमां ?
- (३) काळा घने उज्ज्वल सूर्यविम्ब
ढंकारुं, -ते चित्र दीप्ति अगम्य;
तथापि काळी घनछायपूटे
ज्योति रङ्गो झळहळी न कदी य खटे;
मृत्युतणी श्यामल छाया ढांके,
अनन्ततामां क्षण भंग दाखे;
तथापि ए छायाणां पेलीं पारे
देदीप्यमान चिरजीवनतिन्धु म्हाले;

The whole poem is thus inspired by restrained feeling, sanity of outlook and unfailing hope. The personal touch is so subdued that the expression of a personal bereavement becomes a sad, pensive song of a universal human mood.

XI

Accurate and precise in literary execution, Narsinhrao has used his learning, power of analysis and critical faculty to constitute himself the censor of the literary world. Inaccuracies and vagaries, a new literary phenomenon, a new sentiment, a new use of a word, mistakes of every literary man have been ruthlessly examined and exposed by him. He worships precision, and compels others to bow before it. And scarcely has an author written in the language without an anticipatory shudder at what Narsinhrao may have to say about it when published.

In his Manomukura most of his earlier critical essays are collected. They are judgments written in a language of great power by a very competent judge, determined to show no indulgence and often no courtesy. Literary criticism, thus, has been elevated to a responsible and conscientious art. The work, in which he discusses Premānanda's plays and holds them to be forgeries, is a masterpiece of exhaustive analysis and will long remain a model for aspiring critics. None can interpret the beauties of a new work as Narsinhrao can; but he will not do it often. His severity always stifles the creative art of the critic in him. His lectures on philology were the result of a life of scholarship, industry and accuracy, and Gujarāta may not see their like perhaps for decades. Smaranamukura distinctly adds to the literary stature of the author. This work is a collection of pen-portraits, in which the individuality of some well-known friend or relative of the author is presented on the background of intimate details.

अनन्त आ जीवनसिन्धुमध्य
 मृत्यु बने बुदबुद, तेह सय
 जाए फूटी जो ! कंई वारवारे,
 ने सिंधु तो वहीं रहे अविराम धारे.

The life-like portraits of the author's parents and of Manishankar Bhatt disclose great literary art.

He has given to the literature a great prose style, precise, polished and faultless. It is capable of expressing the most abstruse thought or the finest shade of emotion ; is always severely pointed, often sternly judicial ; sometimes, as in Smaranamukura, breaking up into little, pointed and picturesque sentences ; and, if the subject happens to fall within the very restricted limits of the author's sympathy, tender, soft and caressing. Reformer by tradition and outlook, he has been highly appreciative of Western influence ; and at the same time he has accepted the intellectual and literary elements for which the Sāmskr̥tic revival stands. In the literature of the period, he represents for the first time a harmonious adjustment of the influences of England and India. An intellectual aristocrat of the romantic school, he, in worshipping too high a standard, has failed to sympathise with his times.

The whole poem is thus inspired by restrained feeling, sanity of outlook and unfailing hope. The personal touch is so subdued that the expression of a personal bereavement becomes a sad, pensive song of a universal human mood.

XI

Accurate and precise in literary execution, Narsinhrao has used his learning, power of analysis and critical faculty to constitute himself the censor of the literary world. Inaccuracies and vagaries, a new literary phenomenon, a new sentiment, a new use of a word, mistakes of every literary man have been ruthlessly examined and exposed by him. He worships precision, and compels others to bow before it. And scarcely has an author written in the language without an anticipatory shudder at what Narsinhrao may have to say about it when published.

In his Manomukura most of his earlier critical essays are collected. They are judgments written in a language of great power by a very competent judge, determined to show no indulgence and often no courtesy. Literary criticism, thus, has been elevated to a responsible and conscientious art. The work, in which he discusses Premānanda's plays and holds them to be forgeries, is a masterpiece of exhaustive analysis and will long remain a model for aspiring critics. None can interpret the beauties of a new work as Narsinhrao can; but he will not do it often. His severity always stifles the creative art of the critic in him. His lectures on philology were the result of a life of scholarship, industry and accuracy, and Gujarāta may not see their like perhaps for decades. Smaranamukura distinctly adds to the literary stature of the author. This work is a collection of pen-portraits, in which the individuality of some well-known friend or relative of the author is presented on the background of intimate details.

अनन्त आ जीवनसिन्धुमध्य
मृत्यु बने बुद्धुद, तेह सद्य
जाए फूटी जो ! कइं वारवारे,
ने सिन्धु तो वही रहे अविराम धारे.

The life-like portraits of the author's parents and of Manishankar Bhatt disclose great literary art.

He has given to the literature a great prose style, precise, polished and faultless. It is capable of expressing the most abstruse thought or the finest shade of emotion ; is always severely pointed, often sternly judicial ; sometimes, as in Smaranamukura, breaking up into little, pointed and picturesque sentences ; and, if the subject happens to fall within the very restricted limits of the author's sympathy, tender, soft and caressing. Reformer by tradition and outlook, he has been highly appreciative of Western influence ; and at the same time he has accepted the intellectual and literary elements for which the Samskritic revival stands. In the literature of the period, he represents for the first time a harmonious adjustment of the influences of England and India. An intellectual aristocrat of the romantic school, he, in worshipping too high a standard, has failed to sympathise with his times.

CHAPTER III.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SĀMSKR̥TIC REVIVAL.

(From 1888)

Manishanker Ratnaji Bhatt (1867-1923)—Purvālāpa—Cakravāṭka Mūhuna—Khaṇḍakāvya—Sursinh Gohel, Kalāpi (1874-1900)—Tragedy of his life—Kalāpi-no Kekārava—Hridayatṛipuṭi—His poetry—Ramanbhai Mahipatram Nilakanth (1868-1928)—Bhaktambhadra—Rāmo Parvata—Kavītāna Sāhitya—Behramji Malabari (1863-1912)—Ardeshir Framji Khabardar (Born 1882)—Kalikā (1926)—Darśanikā (1931)—Balvantrai Thakore—(Born 1869)—Samskr̥ta works rendered into the language—Nanalal Dalpatram Kavi (Born 1877)—His influence on language—His garabis—His dramas—Jayājayaṇṭa (1914)—Viśva-gītā (1927)—Khaṇḍākhāyana, a new form in literature—Sanjhamitrā—(1931)—His Prose—His romanticism—Janmashanker Mahashankar Buch (Born 1877)—Fiction—Stage—Dahyabhai Dholshaji (1862-1906)—Old Gujarātī literature—Ranjitram Vavabhai.

Samskr̥tic revival, once firmly established and vitalised by English influences fertilised many fields of literature. Its great achievements were the new poetry, subjective, lyrical, word-perfect; the new forms in which it was cast, the khaṇḍa kāvya, the khaṇḍa-ākhyāna, the lyric and the sonnet. And it made of garabī a thing of perfect beauty and grace.

I

Manishankar Ratnaji Bhatt (1867-1923), otherwise known as Kānta, was a poet of high order but limited compass. Most of his poems are now collected in a volume entitled Purvālāpa. Among his prose works, his two dramas, Guru Govindsingh and Roman Svārājya, scarcely touch the artistic level of his poetry. He wrote essays in a graceful and chaste style. His Eka Devīnūn Vṛttānta, a translation of an episode from Goethe's Wilhelm Meister, is exquisite.

His eminence in literature entirely rests on his poems. Though composed about the time the early poetic efforts of Narsinharaο were being published, they exhibit a complete harmony of Samskr̥tic and English influences previously unknown to the language. The best of them are Vasantavijaya, The Triumph of Spring, and Cakravāka-mithuna, The Pair of Cakravākas, In form they are what has come to be known as khaṇḍa-kāvya: a short poem partly narrative and descriptive, with dialogue of lyric charm, each dominant mood being expressed in a suitable Samskrta vritta. In giving the kāvya a fresh and plastic form, the poet has given to the literature an art-form of great beauty and possibility. The delicate lingering beauty of expression and sentiment in these two poems caress the reader like the touch of a loved hand.

Nature was to him a mistress to be adored with a sensuous longing. In Vasantavijaya we have a description of spring.

Slowly and gently the wind blows, laden with pollen. The creepers spread fragrance all around. The eyes are delighted. The cuckoo, sitting one knows not where, sings a delightful song. The loving heart, shaken, melts; and control disappears leaving desires free.¹

Cakravāka-mithuna is based on the myth that these ancient symbols of undying love live together during the day, but have to spend the night in separation and in vain efforts to find each other. A pair of cakravāka birds lived in a range of mountains. The sun began to set.

The waters of the river grew dark. The rays of the sun reached the mountain tops. The beloved, in fear, embraced the mate, agitated over the impending separation.²

The pair was young and loving, eternally absorbed in mutual love.³

1. धीमे धीमे छटायी कुसुमरज लइ डोलतो वायु वाय,
चोपासे बलिओथी परिल प्रसरे, नेत्रने तृप्ति थाय;
बेसीने कोण जाणे क्याहिं परभृत्तिका गान स्वर्गाय गाय,
गाळी नांखे हलावी रसिक हृदयने, वृत्तिथी दाव जाय.

2. सरितनां जल कृष्ण जरा थयां,
किरण सूर्य तणां शिखरे गयां ;
समय नाथ प्रिया हृदये धरे,
विरह संभव आकुलता करे !

3. विहगयुग्म किशोर रसज्ञ ए,
रस महीज परस्पर मग्न ऐ.

They always looked at the sunrise together from on high; in joy and sorrow, a moment's forgetfulness sent them mad.¹...

They played hide and seek in the boughs the whole day long. And when the beloved bathed in the stream, the mate poured water over her head²...

But their love was insatiate; their desire for love never faded.³

Their one desire was to escape the darkness which was to separate them, and as the sun sank in the west, they flew higher to see its setting glory. The orb of the sun touched the sea.

In every fibre they burnt at the thought of impending bereavement. They separated; but, unable to suffer the pain, they met again. As the moment of torture, by fate decreed, came near, they drew close to each other. The lovers, courageous though they were, were faint.⁴

The beloved then addressed the mate thus :

Lord ! Let us live amidst these stones no longer. Why, Oh, why should we suffer thus ? Let us go where the sun shines for ever—where fate has a more generous heart. She spoke thus and stopped; she had no courage left. The lovely female, bereft of hope, wept ; and the lover wiped the tear with his delicate wing.⁵

1. ऊंचे बेसी रविउदयने जेह साथे विलोके,
घेलां जेवां क्षण स्मृति थतां जे दिसे हर्षशोके.
2. विमुख एकली न्हाती प्रिया शिरे,
पति जइ अभिषेक कदी करे !
3. प्रणयनी पण तृप्ति थती नथी :
प्रणयनी अभिलाष जती नथी :
4. रोमे रोमे विरहभयनी वेदनाथी बळे छे,
छूटी छूटी, सहन न थतां, मत्त पाछां मळे छे ;
वेळा थातां विधिदमननी गात्र खेंचाय सामां,
प्रेमी बने धृति अति छतां थाय संमूढ आमां.
5. पाषाणोमां नहिं नहिं हवे आपणे, नाथ ! रहेवुं :
शाने आवुं, नहिं नहिंज, रे ! आपणे, नाथ ! रहेवुं !
चालो एवा स्थल महिं, वसे सूर्य जेमां सदैव,
आनाथी कै अधिक हृदये आर्द्र ज्यां होय दैव !
प्रवदतां अटकी गइ ए अहीं,
अधिक धीरज धारी शकी नहीं ;
थइ निराश हवे ललना रुवे,
मुदुल पिच्छ थकी प्रिय ते ल्हवे !

He replied :

Your words break my heart. They express my heart's inmost wish. My patience is at an end, loved comrade ! But where the days are long, the nights are long too. How can love hope for everlasting happiness ? Let us destroy separation, aye, even life itself. While the sun is yet in the sky, let us meet the unknown ; close our eyes and attain unity.

His lyrics have no exotic flavour in them. They came fresh from a heart open to a vivid emotional experience and paved the way for Nanalal's artistic creations. This experience was reality to the poet, its literary expression but an accident ; and hence the fresh, warm charm of his poems. But religious devotion captured his imagination ; he fell under the influence of Swedenberg ; and literature was the loser.

II

Kalapī, The Peacock, is the name by which literature knows of the short-lived Sursinhji Gohel, Thakor of Lathi (1874-1900). His works are : Poems collected in one volume, styled Kalapīno Kekārava, The Notes of a Peacock, (1913) ; Kāshmirno Pravāsa, Travels in Kashmir ; Mala ane Mudrikā (1912) a novel ; Kalapīnā Patro (1922), Letters ; Saṁvāda, Dialogues and Letters on Swedenborg (1923) ; and Nārīhṛdaya (1933) a novel.

At sixteen he married two wives, the favourite being styled by the poet Rama. But the sentimental prince fell in love with Shobhana, a maid of the princess, who came of a community from which the male and female attendants of the chiefs of Kāthiāvāḍa are drawn. She was 'a piece of kacchi stone' at first, but the poet's love and training turned her into a gem. He was prevailed upon to give

-
- 1 हा ! शब्दो आ सरल सरखा मर्मने तंत्रि भेदे,
गर्भात्माने स्फुरित करता धैर्यने छेक छेदे ;
लांबा छे ज्यां दिन, प्रिय सखी ! रात्रिण दीर्घ तेवी,
आ ऐश्वर्ये प्रणयसुखनी, हाय ! आशा ज केवी ?
अवर कांड उपाय हवे नथी :
विरह, जीवन, संहरीए मथी :
गहनमां पडीए दिन देखतां :
नयन मीची करी दइ एकता !

her away in marriage to a member of her caste. The poet was, however, heart-broken, and the anguish of his heart came out in an impassioned cry in his verse. Ultimately he got her back, and married her. This is a very trivial, and not an unusual, incident in the life of an Indian chief. But the poet's soft heart made him highly susceptible to all influences. He felt he was ruthlessly pursued by his little world and decided to give up his gādī when sudden death ended his life. He died at the age of twenty-six, a victim as much of his environments as of his sensitiveness.

Sometimes, when he affected a poetic style flavoured with Urdu words, he came to grief. 'He misused Persian words and travestied the conceits of a Hafez and a Sadi, a Hali and a Nazir.'¹ But, where he followed the path which Manilal, Narsinhrao and Manishankar Bhatt had laid before him, he was very successful. The higher art of Narsinhrao or Kānta was beyond him; but he more than made up for it by the subjective intensity with which he infused every line he wrote. He invested ordinary Gujarātī expressions with such feeling as to transmute them into elements of a poetic style.

He loved to call himself a peacock; and like that soft-hearted bird, he uttered melodious notes quivering with high-strung emotion as no one else in the language could. He was sentimental, highly susceptible to environment, and displayed all the enthusiasms and defects of youth. Incessantly in quest of beauty and a visionary by nature, he had a live sense of wonder and delight. Everything appealed to his heightened sensibilities and with a loving hand, he extracted the inner beauty of a lotus plant, or a wounded deer, a widowed heart, or a scene in Kashmir.

Passion, sentimentality, a vague longing for freedom and a morbid love of tears, a penetrating sadness and a sensuous love of nature—all these he had; and he gave profusely of his wealth in his poems and letters.

III.

The bulk of Kalāpino Kekārava consists of Hṛdayatṛipin and the poems associated with it. They form a lyrical autobiography of a sentimental and love-lorn swain, in which all his poignant moods are laid bare. He could not think of meeting his beloved without being fascinated with the tragic side of it. In his Jyān Tun Tyān Hun, 'Where you are, There I am', he sings:

1. D. B. Zaveri: Further Milestones in Gujarati Literature p. 87.

I could not live with you, dear. I live in separation, consumed by its fire to ashes. Love! Is life so dear to me that I should bear this living torture? Shall I have to live without you in this world? What shall I do? Go about as a fakir with my body besmeared with your ashes? Dear! Death, even, shall not divide us; its dread darkness shall not deprive me of you—no not even a little. If you go, I will not be left behind. I do not covet life. Go and live in Heaven; and there I will follow, your bond slave.¹

In Hrdayatripuṭī the poet weaves his sentiments round the ancient but ever-new subject of the eternal triangle. Under the shadow of green trees, Shobhana, the six-year-old orphan girl, weeps over the loss of her guardian. 'The soft hearted Evening wipes the tears from her closed lotus-eyes, and herself sheds starry tears in sympathy.'² Rama comes to her. She is noble in her walk and speech; for, 'the blood of Kshatriyas flows in her veins, fiery and divine.'³ She offers solace to Shobhana: "I shall be what you desire, a friend, a mother, a sister."

After two years, Rama is married; and when she goes to her husband's house, she takes the devoted Shobhana with her as a maid. Six years pass by uneventfully.

1. संयोगी तुज ना बन्यो, विरहमां जीतुं बनी भस्म हुं,
प्यारी ! शुं दुःखदाह, शुं जीवित छे प्यारं मने एवहुं ?
एवुं शुं बनशे, प्रिये ! जगतमां तारा बिना हुं जीतुं ?
तारी खाक लगावी अंग पर शुं बावो बनी हुं फरं ?
ताराथी मुज आ द्विधा नहि बने हैयुं, प्रिये ! मृत्युयी,
मारी तुं नव लेश ओछी बनशे ए कालरात्रि थकी;
तुं जातां नहि हुं रहुं, जीवितनो लोभी नथी हुं नकी,
तुं स्वर्गे कर वास, के समजजे आ दास उभो तहीं !
2. मीचेलां ए नयनकमलो सारतां अश्रुबिन्दु,
संध्यातुं ए हृदय गळतां तारलाअश्रु आब्यां !
3. तेना म्हाँ पर ने नसनेस महीं उच्चार ने चाल्मां,
क्षत्रीओ तणुं उग्र दिव्य झळ्ळी लोही बहेतुं हतुं.

The heart of Rama's husband was soft like a lotus. Divine love gently dripped from it. A sweet smile always played upon his lips, and a joy was over his limbs.¹

But none knew, not even he himself, that his heart flowed through chasms of unknown thought and that he was unhappy. Once he sees Shobana, and falls in love with her.

"I yearn for Rama," he says, "and my heart longs for the poor little girl. And Rama loves both of us alike."² A conflict of emotions tears the heart of the hero.

Love drives me to break all fetters; Duty draws me to my prison, to die in misery. Here is Duty; there, Love; and, between them, all that is left to me is tears. Duty is at war with Love; and what is left is death.

If the beloved seeks your shelter, you dare not give it. But if she seeks your shelter, how dare you drive her away? To the loving wife, the word is pledged, "I shall not be any one else's." But if the pledge is kept, the beloved will die.

Why do you struggle in mid-air? Go deeper still, break through obstructing rocks: Love divided is never diminished—Love is the Lord of all the earth.³

1. हलुं तेनुं हैयुं कमल सरखुं कोमल, अने
हतो तेमां दैवी प्रणयरस मीठो टपकतो;
हलुं तेने म्होंए मधुर स्मित कांइ चळकतुं,
दिसे तेनां गात्रो पुलकित थतां हर्षमय सौ.
2. रमाने हुं याचुं ! मम हृदय याचे गरीब ए !
रमाने तो व्हालां हृदयद्वय छे एक सरखां !
3. प्रणय घसडे तोडी देवा अहो सहु पिंजरां !
फरज घसडे केदी थावा अने मरवा दुःखे !
फरज हती आ, पेली प्रीति ! रहुं रडतुं हवे !
फरज लडती प्रीति साधे ! रहुं मरतुं हवे !
शरण प्रणयी आवे तेने रखाय अरे नहीं !
शरण प्रणयी आवे तेने कढाय नहीं वळी !
वचन प्रियने आपेछे, " हुं थईश न अन्यनो " !
वचन प्रियनुं पाळे तेथी मरे दुःखी दिल को !
अरे ! शाने आवो अधवच रहे तुं लटकतो ?
हजु जा ऊंडो तो पड सहु तहीं तूटी पडशे !
विभागो कीधार्थी प्रणय न कदी न्यून बनतो,
अने तेथी, भाई ! प्रणय प्रभु छे आ जगतनो.

Ultimately they—he and Shobhana—meet; and Duty loses the battle.

Fear was cast aside; heart beat on heart. Lips of love wiped tears of anguish. Sweet Time; first Love; Unity divine! And the glowing hearts shared the joy of the festive moment.¹

Rama sees them together. Her faith in her husband, her Rāma, as she calls him, is gone. She is heart-broken. The lovers also see their hour of trial come.

Their eyes opened; they saw an earthquake shattering a universe...They bade adieu. Seeking mutual forgiveness, they parted in tears.²

Rama orders Shobhana to leave the house. The hero bows to the inevitable, but, overborne with grief, lies dying. The forgiving Hindu wife relents. She tells Shobhana :

You cannot live without my lord; without you, he will die. You are his. May both of you be happy.³

The hero is delirious. He exclaims :

“Rama, my heart, forgive me. Dear, I go yearning for you. Give me your hand; keep it close to my heart. And Shobhana, close my dying eyes”
.....And the three hearts were lost in one dream, as when two rivers flow together into the sea.⁴

1. डर नव रह्यो ! हैये हैयुं रह्युं धडकी, अने
प्रिय अधरथी अश्रु उन्हां छछाई गयां सहु !
समय मधुरो ! प्हेली प्रीति ! अने रसएकता !
हृदय नवलां ल्हाणुं एवुं सुखे मचवी रह्यां !
2. हैयां तणां नयन ए उघडी गयां, ने
ब्रह्मांडकम्प सरखुं कंई नेत्र देखे !
रे ! शुं थयुं ? कयम थयुं ? कयम खून कीधुं ?
ते सौ रह्युं तरी ज स्वप्न शुं नेत्र पासे !
छेल्ली सलाम करी नेत्र पच्च्यां विख्टां !
याची क्षमा गळ्गळां विख्टां थयां ए !
3. “ पियु विना तुं जीवी ना शके नकी,
“ न तुं विना ए पियु देह राखशे. ”
“ थई तुं एनी ! सुखियां थजो तमे ! ”
4. रे रे ! रमा ! हृदय ओ ! कर माफ ! व्हाली !
हुं जाउं छुं ! तलसुं छुं ! कर माफ ! व्हाली !
छाती परे कर हवे तुज राख ! व्हाली !
ने शोभनाकर वती मुज नेत्र चांप !

A vein of morbid world-weariness ran through his poetic effusions from his boyhood, when he sang: 'A person already consumed needs no ashes to turn ascetic.' In Amāra Raha, 'Our Path,' he sang:

Ye slaves of law ! Who made the laws ? But to the slaves, what shall I say ?
Our path lies the other way.

We love not pomp, nor fame, nor love. No, no, our path lies the other way.¹

And in his pathetic poem Tamārā Raha, Your Path, written a few days before his death, he addresses God like a Sufi poet.

I am tired, Love, waiting and waiting for You on Your path. In hope, I was happy. But now I am spent, Love ! . . .

I could not do anything ; nor can I do it to-day ; and nothing, nothing can I do any more. Love !

Only the trouble will be Yours, whatever happens. I am done for. Pray, send a reprieve. Ultimately You have to forgive everything. Then, why not do it to-day, Love ?

But except when his sensibilities were wounded, his output was common-place, as appears from Hamirsinha Gohel, a fragment of the epic which he attempted.

IV.

His prose was clear and direct, and exhibited all the emotional qualities of his verse. Kashmīrno Pravāsa is the travel diary of a very sentimental lover of nature. His Patro contains some fine letters in the language. They show him to be a considerate ruler, a thoughtful and studious man, a true friend, a man of generous impulses who longed to live nobly, a genuine poet in real life. After his marriage to Shobhana, he writes to Lalita, the poet.

What you have heard is all true. Perhaps you may not know how patiently I have suffered what fell to my lot. How was a little girl to bear insufferable torture as of hard labour in gaol. She was dying ; she would have been perhaps dead in about three months. I was not high-minded enough to kill her for the sake of law or morality ; and I fell in order that she may be saved . . . I do not suggest that I did this for an unselfish purpose ; but, in what I did, I see an effort to rise higher, not to fall. I could not bear it. If you knew how the girl was placed, you would have come to assist me. But the world must

1. गुलामो कायदाना छे ! भला ए कायदो कोनो ?
गुलामोने कहुं हुं शुं ? हमारा राह न्यारा छे !
नहीं जाहोजलालीना, नहीं कीर्ति, न उलफतना—
हमे लोभी छिए, ना ! ना ! हमारा राह न्यारा छे !

take me to be a sinner at present; I could help the girl only after I had decided to invite this verdict. But this is justice as my heart gives it; real justice lies with the Lord.

His early death was an irreparable loss to literature.

V.

Sir Ramanbhai Nilkanth (1868-1928), son of Mahipatram Ruparam, represented Western tendencies of the period as against Govardhanram and Manilal. His works were: Bhadrambhadrā (1900), a satire; Rājino Parvat, a play (1914); Hāsyamandira, The Temple of Laughter (1915); and Kavītāne Sahitya, Poetry and Literature, in four volumes, a collection of essays principally dealing with literary criticism.

Humour had not been much appreciated in Gujarāta, the dominant tendency among critics and readers being to look upon it as levity. The efforts of Dalpatram and Navalram to write a burlesque or a farce had not received encouragement, though on the stage a broad comic piece, the survival of the bhavāi, was always retained to tickle the ears of the groundlings. Ramanbhai was temperamentally different from many other authors of the period; he always appreciated humour and managed to have his sly laugh in conversation, in an essay, or in a dissertation on philology. And as a reformer and a literary opponent of the Mansukhram school, he took terrible revenge for the numberless satires on the reformers by writing Bhadrambhadrā. In this work the reactionary in life and the Samskr̥tist in literature is held up to merciless ridicule.

Daulatshanker, an orthodox Brāhmaṇa, who talks Gujarātī a la Mansukhram, or much worse, is visited by the god Śaṅkara in a dream. The god asks him to change his name, as one of its component was a Persian word 'daulat', and to launch a crusade against the vile reformers, who, among other things, advocate the compulsory remarriage of all widows dead and alive. Up springs the devout Brāhmaṇa, changes his name to Bhadrāmbhadrā (literally, good-good), and, in company with his loyal Sancho Panza, Ambaram, comes to Bombay to take part in a meeting, held at Mādhavbag, to defend the Sanātana

Dharma against the reformers. Then follows a series of extravagant adventures, Bhadrāmbhadra talking in Samskr̥ta compounds and tilting at windmills. A few chapters are taken up with the trial of Bhadrāmbhadra for assault in a magistrate's court, during which the murder of a cockroach forms a source of endless mirth. We take leave of the hero at the time when he is playing god Śaṅkara among his disciples.

The book has no humour, if by humour is meant, in Carlye's words, 'sympathy with the seamy side of things'. It is bitter mockery. The satire often disappears, giving place to an extravagant burlesque. The story is poorly told in places and lacks organic unity. The work is rendered enjoyable by absurd situations and still funnier Samskr̥tised Gujarātī. Bhadrāmbhadra, the pretentious fool with his holy enthusiasm 'to secure the ever-rising glorious triumph of eternal Ārya Dharma', is an immortal figure in Gujarātī fiction.

His sketches in Hāsyamandira describe funny situations and incidents. Many of them are characterized by absurdity and poverty of dramatic presentment. His Rāino Parvata, a drama, unsuccessfully seeks to engraft the creed of social reform on to a plot taken from a folk-tale.

His work as a critic was valuable, and, in one sense, constituted a distinct advance both on Navalrām and Narsinhrao. In his Kavitāne Sahitya he tried to formulate a theory of artistic and literary beauty. It was unfortunate that his theories failed to exercise an active influence on the output of contemporary literature.

VI

Though what is known as Parsi Gujarātī was used by a large number of Parsi authors for the benefit of their community, some, in search of purer artistic expression, resorted to Gujarātī proper. The poetry composed by Parsis upto about 1880, was considered by Behramji Malabari, a Parsi critic, as a rank growth. Malabari himself (1863-1912) was a poet of some merit, working on the lines of Narmad and Dalpat. His Anubhaviḱā (1894) and Samsārīkā (1898), however, lacked the higher art of his contemporaries.

Sohrab Palamkot, Dady and Pestonji Taraporewalla, and some others followed Malabari with success.

Bomanji Kharshedji Framroze (1846-1920) known to the public as Dhakanji-bin-Makanji and Birbal also wrote novels, stories, sketches, and verses. But the classical revival brought the Hindus under Samskr̥tic influence, while a desire for Anglicisation destroyed the influence of Persian among the Parsis and prevented them from keeping pace with indigenous lines of development.

The poet of the community, however, who can rank with the best in the language is Ardeshir Framji Khabardar (Born 1881). He began his poetic career under the influence of Narmad, which he soon outgrew. His receptive mind and sense of art, from time to time, fell under the spell of several literary and cultural currents in Gujarata. His works are Kāvyaśikā (1901); Vilāsikā (1905); Prakāśikā (1908); Bhāratano Tāṇkāra (1919); Prabhātano Tapasvī (1920); Sandēśikā (1925); Kalikā (1926); Bhajanikā (1928); Rāsa Candrikā (1929) and Darśanikā (1931). The first five contain poems composed on different occasions and under varying influences. His garabīs and songs are charming, his language is invariably graceful, and his command of metre admirable.

But it was in Kalikā that he outgrew all extraneous influences. Kalikā, The Bud, is a long poem containing three hundred and seventy three stanzas in blank verse, muktadhārā, devised by the poet himself. The whole work is in praise of the beloved, each verse being a complete word-picture of a mood, or an incident, often a metaphor worked out in detail. There is no plot, no character, no dramatic situation, not even fervid subjectivity. Imagination is, in places, smothered under detail; nothing is left for the reader. Poetry, to be great, must have the supreme art of seeming a living spontaneous growth; but this poem is a museum of small works of art, chiselled to a uniform shape and linked together only by a serial number. Some of them, however, are word-perfect, lovely in colour and proportion, full of exquisite, though, at times, extravagant fancies.

On the sea-shore I stand, absorbed in thought, looking at the orb of the sun, half-risen on the rim of the morning sky. I feel like taking a boat, cross the seas, and go through the arched orb to the shore beyond. Likewise, my beloved rose on the horizon of my life; I saw her soul risen like unto this arch,

Then boldly, I let afloat my little craft. Lo! The arch has come. What will the beloved now say ?¹

A fancy is often delicately worked out.

I am fascinated with the mogrā flower, dropped from my beloved's braid. It lies like the moon on the door step of the sky, fallen from the hair of departing night.²

Sometimes, he invests a line with a rare magic by the use of homely words.

You think that once you were not mine. But, remember, it was I who discovered your soul. You are mine—solely mine. I am your saint, and I am your hero.³

And yet one more fancy :

She suspended a rope, rainbow-like, to branches of the mango tree, tall and stately like the trunks of an elephant. My beloved swung and swung on it. And her feet, like pillars of astral light, touched the sky. In the door, stood her mother, aghast. "Come down. What a whim for a girl!" she cried. And like a falling star, aye, the tear of a god, she slipped to the ground.⁴

1. પ્રભાતે દિગંત પર અર્ધ સૂર્યબિમ્બ ઊગે,
જોતો તેને સિંધુકાંઠે કરું હું વિચાર,
જાણે બેસી નૌકામાં ત્યાં સિંધુને વટાવી આશો
સૂર્યના મ્હેરાબમાંથી જાડું પેલી પાર !
જીવનદિગંત પર પ્રિયા જ્યારે ઊગી એવી,
દીઠો મેં ત્યાં એવો એના આત્માનો મ્હેરાબ :
શૌર્યથી સમુદ્રે મારી નૌકાને ઝૂકાવી મેં ત્યાં—
ઓ આવ્યો મ્હેરાબ !—પ્રિયા દેશે શો જવાબ ?
2. ચાલી જતી રજનીના કેશમાંથી खरी पड़ी
क्षितिजना आंगणमां चंद्र पड्यो होय,
प्रिया केरी वेणीमांथी खरीने पडेछुं एवुं
मोगरातुं फूल देखी मन मारुं मोह्य.
3. हती नहीं प्रथम तुं मारी एम धारी लेती,
पण तारा आत्मातणी कीधी मेंज शोध ;
तेथी तुं तो थई मारी पोतानी विशेष हवे :
हुंज तारो जोगीओ, ने हुंज तारो जोध.
4. ऊंची गजसूंद जेवी आंबानी वेडाळी वच्चे
मेघधनु जेवी लटकावी दोरी एक,
प्रिया बेसी तेनी पर हींचको चढावे चाके,
ज्योतिस्तंभ जेवा पग पूगे व्योमे छेक;

Another yet lovelier picture may be added :

On the margin of a lake two mango trees stand, their branches intertwined, By the winds inspired, they bend to look at their own shadows as they wave in the waters below. And so my beloved will stand with me some day, with arm entwined in arm. Then we shall look into the watery mirror, bending and again bending, with cheek on cheek and arm in arm.

Love! In the liquid mirror as we look at each other, arm interwoven in arm, we shall see, not two bodies but one: its shadow only doubled. Lips fastened to lips, eye looking into eye, I will no more be what I was. Love, in my eyes you will see yourself. And I in thine will sink.¹

The lines of farewell are very artistically executed.

Go forth, my Song. Why lament over things which were so sweet yesterday? What was perfect was the gift of the Lord; what I could not see I could not gather. As affliction churned my heart to bitterness, it yielded me a flow of

गृहद्वारे ऊभी एनी बा ए जोती स्तब्ध बने—

“आवी के? आ छोकरीना ए ते शा तरंग?”—

खरता को तारा शी के देवना को अश्रु जेवी

प्रिया सरी पडी त्यांथी मारी दे छलंग ।

1. तळावने तीरे जोड आंबला छे ऊमा झूकी,
डाळीमां छे डाळी त्यां ए बंनेनी गुंथाई;
नीचे रह्यां जळमां ते वायुप्रेर्या झूली झूली
जोय निज छाया रूडी रही झूल खाई;
तळावने तीरे एम गुंथी करडाळीओ त्यां
एक दिन प्रिया ऊभी रहेशे मारी साथ;
झूकी झूकी जोशुं त्यारे ऊंडा जळदर्पणमां
गाल पर गाल अने हाथमांहीं हाथ.
तळावने तीरे, प्रिया, ज्यारे करडाळीओने
गुंथी रहेशुं आपणे त्यां जोतां एकमेक,
प्रतिछाया बेवडी त्यां जोशुं जळदर्पणमां,
जाणे जूदा देह सरी गया ऊंडा छेक;
अघरे अघर, नेणे नेण रहे गुंथाई त्यारे
देहतणुं द्वैत जोतजोतामां हुं खोउं;
प्रिया, मारी आंखमां त्यां जोय मात्र तनेज तुं, अने तारी आंखे हुं समायो मने जोउं । nectar. Let bitterness be mine, sweetness yours. Go forth, my Song! Give measureless joy.¹

Though the general effect is weakened by the wealth of metaphor, exuberance of imagination itself indicates distinct progress in a growing literature.

VII.

Darśanika The Mirror, is an ambitious work. It contains about six thousand lines in the zulaṇā chanda which in Gujarāta has been associated with the prabhātiāns of Narsinhā Mehtā. It consists of nine meditative poems on different aspects of life, and are respectively headed (i) The uncertainty of life, (ii) The dance of death, (iii) The song of life, (iv) The pang of evolution, (v) The fog of religiosity, (vi) The chain of eternity, (vii) The unity of the Absolute, (viii) The duty of life, (ix) The universal religion of Love. This work is on the same lines as Kalikā; each section consists of a set of word-pictures or images. But here philosophic doubts rub shoulders with poetic attempts to read the inner meaning of things; rhythmic meditation, often, becomes combative arguments in rhyme expressed through laboured metaphors. We stand lost in admiration at the craftsman's efforts to raise a structure out of numerous images, many of which possess beauty of language and conception. But inconsistent attitudes in different sections of the poems blur the vision of life which the poet attempts to present.

Few Gujarāti poets have achieved the simple grace of the lines:

To-day, the veil has fallen; and the flood of light is in the sky. My soul

1. જાઓ, મારાં ગીત; બધું મધુરં મધુરં લાગ્યું,
હતું ગઈ કાલે તે, શો તેનો અફસોસ ?
મધુરં જે લાગ્યું તે તો પ્રમુદ્ધ દીધેલ હતું,
અધુરં જે દીસે તેમાં હશે દષ્ટિદોષ;
લાખોલાખ દુઃખોએ જે મંથન હૈયાનાં માંડયાં,
તેની કટુતાએ આપ્યા અમૃતના ઓષ ;
કટુતા સૌ રહો મારી : મધુરતા હો તમારી :
જાઓ, મારાં ગીત, આપો આનંદ અમોઘ !

bathes in the colours of the setting glory. And nectar, in drops, lies in profusion everywhere.¹

The poet laments the uncertainties of life in a manner fresh even in Gujarāṭi.

Man is strong but only as a wave of the sea. Why does he joyfully throw up vain foam?.....

Man is an image made of light and shade. A rainbow is a sweet dream of the sun.....

The land of the gods is yet far far away; but, born of the earth, man always remains earthy.²

While speaking of man in a later section, the poet strikes a different note:

Man! Child of eternity! With a right to supreme joy! A million stars shine; so are you a star.....

To give, to give, and to give again, And yet again, to give—is wealth.

It is the joy of life; and its supreme fulfilment.³

1. आज आकाशनां पडळ उघडी गयां,
ज्योतिनी रेल रेलाय सघळे;
आत्म मुज नाह्य तुज अस्तना रंगमां,
अमृतनां बिंदु वेराय ढगळे।

2. सिंधुनी ऊर्मि शो छे सबळ मानवी
तोय उडवे कशां व्यर्थ फोरां?

तेज अंधारनुं अजब आ पूतळुं.

किरणमय काय ने पलकमय छांय, पण
मेघधनु सूर्यनुं स्वप्न मधुरुं।

देवना देश तो हजी दिगंते रह्या,
माटीजायो रह्यो माटीडाह्यो।

3. मानवी तुं अनंतत्वनुं बाळ छे,
परम आनंद पर हक्क तारो;
क्रोड तारा झबुकता हसे विश्वमां,
ते महीं एक तुं पण सितारो।

आपवुं, आपवुं, फरी फरी आपवुं,
ने हजी आपवुं, एज रिद्धि:
एक आनंद ए परम छे जीवननो,
आपवामां परम जीवनसिद्धि.

VIII.

The principal works of Balvantrai Kalianrai Thakore (Born 1869) are: Darśaniynū, (1924) a collection of short stories; Bhaṇakāra, Echoes, Pt. (1917), Pt. II (1929), a collection of poems; Ugati Juvāni, Growing Youth (1923), a play; Lyric (1932); and other sketches, essays and addresses published from time to time. His prose style, though clear, weighty and thoughtful, lacks charm and elasticity. His essays on the lyric and on Sarasvatichandra are both excellent specimen of critical analysis and literary interpretation. He is an unflinching upholder of classic models, and has declined to trim his sails to suit the exuberance and irresponsibility of modern romantic authors, or the vulgarisation of literary quality in the interests of the man in the street. He never forgets the fundamental difference between literature of quality and that of education, propaganda and sensation.

The poems—many of them are sonnets—in Bhaṇakāra are splendid attempts to emancipate poetry from rhyme, assonance and time-measure. According to the author 'poetic forms, which do not exist independently of music and do not flow unrestricted by recurring time measure, may be suited for song or recitation; but they fetter real poetry.' Starting from this axiom, he presents lyrics which, however limited in number and variety, are characterized by perfect harmony of word and sense. Emotion is expressed with exquisite self-restraint. A little picture is drawn by deft touches, and the more it is viewed the lovelier it grows.

Bursting with love, I wander, seeking one who could well receive the flood
By maddening thirst oppressed, I pine for one who could give me water Wherever I look, I see but a struggling crowd of human forms. Oh! Where shall I find the one who could sustain my heart? ¹

-
1. પ્રણય—ઝમરે પ્રેયોં ઢુંડું સ્ત્રીલી શકનારને,
પ્રણય—તરસે ઘેલો જાતું પિલાવનહારને :
બહુ તરવરે મનુજાકારો જુઓ દગ જાય જ્યાં,
પણ હૃદયને ધારે એવું કહો મઠવું ક્યહાં !

In another sonnet, the lover offers a mogrā flower to his lady-love with these words :

Look, my heart has as many petals as this mogrā. But how shall I tell you how dark they are?...Goddess mine! You have indeed come to save me: wait a while: a little time, I pray. I long to be myself first. Every petal of the mogrā in your hair is pure white: let me make my heart as pure, and then, I am yours.¹

The heroine replies :

Even if your soul soars eagle-wise in the sky, come down. Friend, take your twin-soul with you as you wing yourself aloft. With me, you shall be pure: With you, I will flower! Love! Let us create a new world, smiling with hope. Shall we sing? Or, tell me, shall we pray? The whole day round, the song of life I hear,—and the song of love and duty.²

After an inevitable separation, the heroine sends a charming message to the hero.

By day and night, I dream of you, my love. Come and give me, again, what's so familiar and yet so fascinating.

The fates had drawn me deep into waters, unfathomable; a tidal wave has washed me back to shore. I have come, no doubt: I know not where I went: I know not how I came. The thread of my life was spared; and in gratitude, I humbly pray.

The by-gone days, I remember, were once so real, dear; but they are now elusive as dreams. Come to me soon! Let your arms and lips stand witness: bring me the touch of sweetness and the eyes of love, and the words which bring eternal joy.

1. निहाळ दल मोगरे, मुज उरे पडो एटलां:
अने तुज समीप केम कहूं कृष्ण ए केटलां !

परंतु प्रिय देवि, तूं उतरी हाथ मुज झालवा,
—जरा धीरज ! जरा वखत ! तलसुं पोत प्रकटाववा:

दले दल विशुद्ध आ कच विशे दीपे मोगरो,
दले दल विशुद्ध आ उर करूं,—पछी ताहरो.

2. अने गरुड व्योममां तुज उडे ज आत्मा उंचे,
नीचे उतर, लै उडाव निज साथी आत्मा, सबे.
पवित्र करूं हुं त्हेने, खोलव तूं कला माहरी,
पियु ! सरजिये नवी हसती सृष्टि आशाभरी.
कहे करवुं गान ? बोल, ललकारिये प्रार्थना ?
पले पल उठे सुरो जीवन प्रेम कर्तव्यना.

For a season past, dearest mine, there sleeps a winsome burden where you placed your head and always asked, "Am I too heavy?" It is lovely as it sucks its lotus-toe with endless joy. Come, see it : look at its eyes : and, love, let me know who it is like.¹

The 'Mid-day of Love' is another lyric of beauty.

The moment of birth is far away; I scarcely can remember it. The moment of death is still far away, dim, non-existent. Overhead, lightening flashes; deep waters revolve. Behind in both lies concealed, darkness unfathomable. It is all pervading purusha and prakṛti—Śaṅkara and Pārvaṭi—You and I, I and You—the twins indivisible—Unity !²

The poet can strike a true note of pathos.

In your hour of decline, I had expected peace to come; the evening to smile, may be, for a moment; and the koel to sing. Expected that the wounds of the wounded will be healed; that my loved koel will swim across the perilous stream and, fever-free, rest on the happy bank.....But the expected came to

1. વહાલા મદારા, નિશદિન હવે થાય શંખા ત્હમારી,
આવો, આપો પરિચિત પ્રતીતિ બધી ચિત્તહારી.
દૈવે જાણે જલ ગહનમાં છેલ્લી લીધી હતી તે
આળી સ્હેજે તટ પર ફરીથી મ્હને છોળેલે ;
ને આવી તોપણ નવ લહું કયાં ગઈ, કેમ આવી,
—આયુર્દોરી ઋટી ન ગઈ તેથી રહું શીર્ષ નામી.
ને સંસ્કારો ગત ભવ તળા તે કની સર્વ વહાલા,
જાણું સાંચા, તદપિ દીસતા સ્વપ્ન જેવા જ ઠાલા;
માટે આવો, કર અઘરની રમ્ય સાક્ષી પુરાવો,
મીઠા સ્પર્શો, પ્રણયિ નયનો, અમૃતાલાપ લાવો.
બીજું, વહાલા, શિર મુકી જ્યહાં 'ભાર લાગે શું ?' કહેતા,
ત્યાં સૂતેહું વજન નહું વીતી શ્વેતુ એક વહેતાં:
ગોરું ચૂસે અછુટ રસથી અંગુઠો પદ્મ જેવો,
આવી, જોઈ, દયિત, ઉચરો લોચને કોણ જેવો ?
2. આઘી આઘી જનનઘટિકા, સાંભરે તે ન જેવી:
આઘી આઘી વિલયઘટિકા, દ્વાંચિયે તે ન જેવી:
માથે ઝંઢું યુતિદલ લસે, વારિઝંઢાળ ફરતું,
ને બંનેમાં તિમિર સમ શું કૈં અનિર્વાચ્ય છુપતું.
બાહ્યાંતરમાં પુરુષપ્રકૃતિ ધૂર્જટિઅમ્બિકા એ,
હું-હું હું-તું ઋટિ રહિતનું દ્વંદ્વ-અદ્વૈત તે એ.

nought. All that was left was the heartless laugh of cruel fate, uproarious, flaming, all-destroying.¹

But the poet often makes a fetish of a rugged style, which, at the first glance, looks obscure and strains the attention. But Balvantrai's effort contains the germ of future progress in Gujarātī lyrical poetry.

IX.

Anandashankar Bapubhai Dhruva (Born 1869), now Pro-Vice-chancellor of the Benares Hindu University, a learned Sanskr̥tist, devoted his energies to producing a valuable series of books on Hindu ethics, religion and mythology. He is the high-priest of Sanskr̥tic revival in its best form. His notes on current topics published in Vasanta, a monthly magazine edited by him, and his literary essays and addresses contain the most balanced exposition of its philosophy as applied to modern life. He is the purest stylist in the language, combining dignity, clarity and balance in perfect proportion.

A powerful literary activity during this period was the rendering of great Sanskr̥ta works into the language. For the first time, ordinary people looked at the noble literary art of the great masters, and learnt to appreciate what had been up to now the monopoly of a few paṇḍitas. This had a three-fold effect. Literary technique became artistic; taste grew purer; and the ideals of Aryan culture, as embodied in the original literature, replaced the purāṇikā's diluted variety on which the general public had so far been fed.

Ranchodbhai was the first to attempt translation of classical dramas; but Manilal Dvivedi began the new movement

-
1. धार्युतुं जे प्रहरायमते....
 शांत पडी संध्या षडि खिलशे, ने कोकिल गाशे.
 धार्युतुं घायल घा शमशे,
 व्हेन दोह्यलं तरी उतरशे,
 ने कोकिल विगतज्वर म्हारो, जोशे सुख आरो.
 धार्यु तु-सौ धूळ मळ्यु ते !
 अट्टहास्य प्रलयो भुक्चु ते
 अवळचंड बेहया दैवचुं, अपकृत दिलहोणुं.

by translating Bhavabhūti's Uttararāmacarita and Mālatī-mādhava and Bhagavadgītā with literary effect. Kādambarī was translated by Chhaganlal Pandya with skill. Śakuntala once rendered by Yajnika, was re-translated by Khakhar and Balvantrai Thakore. Many of the important Purāṇas, including the Vishnu, the Bhagavata, the Harivamśa, the Rāmāyana, the Mahābhārata and the Upanishads were rendered into the language. Nanalal translated Bhagavadgītā, Śakuntala, Meghadūta, Vaishanava Śodaśa grantha and five Upanishads. The Bhagavadgītā was the general favourite of translators.

Divan Bahadur Keshavlal Harshadrai Dhruva (Born 1859), a poet and scholar, with rare humility, sacrificed his career as an independent literary artist to rendering the classics. His works are Amaruśataka, Gitagovinda, Mudrārākshasa, Vikramorvaśiyām and the plays of Bhāsa. Many of these, in addition to being scholarly renderings, sought to recreate the spirit and beauty of the original in Gujarātī, and have exercised great influence on contemporary productions. His Padyaracanāno Itihāsa, History of Poetic Structure (1933), being Vassonji Madhowji Lectures delivered at the University, is the first part of a great work, tracing the evolution of vernacular metres through Apabhraṃśa and Prākṛta to Vedic metres. His essays, the result of profound scholarship, have largely contributed to an accurate and scientific study of Old Gujarātī literature.

X

The most outstanding poet of the new literature is Nanalal, Kavi Dalpatram's son (Born 1877). His literary activity may be roughly classified into—

(a) garabīs, many of which are collected in Nānā Rāsa Part I (1910), and Part II (1928) ;

(b) odes, songs and other poems mainly found in Kettlāṅka Kavyo Part I (1903), Part II (1908), Vasantotsava (1905), Citradarśano (1921), Gutamanjarī (1928) and Auja ane Agar (1933) ;

(c) dramas, the principal ones being Indukumāra, Part I (1909), Part II (1927), and Part III (1932), Jayajayanta (1914), Rājārshi Bharata (1922), Viśvagītā (1927), Jehangir-Nurjehan (1928), Shahanshah Akbar (1930), Sanghamitrā (1931) ;

(d) an epic styled Kurukshetra, of which seven books have been published so far ;

(e) a novel, Ushā (1918);

(f) essays and addresses collected in Sāhitya-manthana (1924), Udbodhana (1927), Sāmsāramanthana (1927) and Ardhaśatabdinā Bebolo (1927) ;

and

(g) Part I of a biography Kaviśvara Dalpatram (1933.)

His claim to eminence rests on the richness and freedom which he gave to the language ; on the expressiveness with which he invested poetic diction ; on his garabīs and songs of great beauty ; on his rhythmic prose which has opened a new era in prose and verse ; on the new art-form which he has given by his dramas ; on his stately odes ; and on the exuberance with which he has held up the Sāmskr̥tic revival to admiration. The pronounced features running through all the works of the author give a Janus-faced aspect to his works. One shows an artistic temperament opening up fresh vistas of literary freedom, but circumscribed by imagination and emotion of uneven intensity. The other aspect comes in when the intellectual outlook, narrow and misty, infuses elements of intolerance into its artistic counterpart.

Gujarātī, like other Indian vernaculars, became literary only by borrowing the wealth of Sāmskr̥ta, but more after the fashion of Marāṭhī, which had been freely adopting tatsama words for old and new concepts. Bengali, on the other hand, had embarked on word-formation by a free use of compounds as in Sāmskr̥ta with great effect. Nanalal struck out a new path, indiscriminately compounding words of every origin, Sāmskr̥ta, Persian and Old Gujarātī. Further he coined new tadbhava words, or used old ones in a new sense. He introduced the fashion, now popular, of using a substantive with क्त—the infinitive termination—as a verb. In his works he pressed into service every word of recognised or recognisable artistic value in the language. The language, thus, acquired a new wealth and freedom. But the incessant hunt for poetic expressions has often ended disastrously. The frequent use of diminutives and alliteration, of words like रस and ब्रह्म irrespective of sense, and of metaphors mixed several times over, has set the fashion for verbal freaks of vague or no meaning.

XI

With the spread of English education in Gujarāta, garabī, the dance, fell into disrepute among the educated ladies, till theatrical companies like Śrī Morbī and Vankaner Nāṭaka Samājas with their traditions of Kāthiāvāḍa, gave it a place on the stage. The garabī recaptured public interest; was introduced into the schools; and in a few years regained its lost hold over Gujarāṭi women. Nanalal furnished them with an appealing literary accompaniment. With the modern outlook, the prudery of educated woman came to an end; and in Bombay with its facilities for procuring musical, scenic and lighting equipments for the occasion, the progressive women of the city have made of the garabī an artistic dance of growing beauty and rhythm.

Nanalal's garabīs—the number of which is now over two hundred—are sometimes a modern edition of an old one of Dayārama's or some obscure author's. But he invariably transmutes the old material into gold. He maintains a high level of rich poetic diction. He manipulates words of inexpressible charm. He subordinates the stereotyped attitude of Rādhā towards Kṛishṇa to an appealing subjectivity, suppressing the outspoken sensuality of older poets. The old-world flavour is retained by words, lines, and tricks of repetition familiar to folk-garabīs. Objects of nature, familiar to older poets like the moon, peacock, cloud and spring, are described with ecstatic delight. Sentiments are etherealised by the poet's trick of introducing words of vague meaning associated with the high atmosphere of classic tradition. Every lyric is put to a folk tune of captivating lilt. A subtle touch of emotion; a brief experience; witching words of poetic value; a haunting tune—and sense, sound and rhythm combine to produce the garabī of Nanalal.

Gopikānā Gorasī, The milk-pot of the Cowherdess, is a modern version of an ancient subject.

Take and drink the milk. Lo! The gopikā's milk-pot is full to the brim,

A flame of gold is on her face; a flame of love is in her eyes; a flood of nectar is in her soul. Lo! The Gopikā's milk-pot is full to the brim.

The heart has but one hope; the lover has but one dance; love's desire is quenchless. Lo! The Gopikā's milk-pot is full to the brim.¹

And the charm of this new edition of an old garabī is inimitable :

The rain drips gently and yet gently, and my spotted scarf is wet. Youth's love drips so gently, and my spotted scarf is wet.....In the crowd of beauties, Joy swings to and fro; and the hand-drums beat sweetly. The moon winks so slyly. Smile on, my moon, my honey-sweet! My spotted scarf is wet, for the rain drips gently and yet gently.²

And the trick of repetition is used with great effect in many of the garabīs.

"The wild lover who stole my heart, I saw him only last year; I saw him under the raining sky, like a lovely peacock. The beloved, I saw him last year.

He was playing with the lotus stem, this, my heart's love. The beloved, I saw him last year.³

1. गोरस लेई लेई पीजो,
हो ! हे ! गोपिकानी गोरसी भरेली.
वदने छे हेमज्योत,
नयने छे प्रेमज्योत;
आत्मांमां अमृतनी हेली :
हो ! गोपिकानी गोरसी भरेली.
हृदयानी आश एक,
रसियाना रास एक;
प्रमीनी प्यास ना छीपेली :
हो ! गोपिकानी गोरसी भरेली.
2. झीणा झरमर वरसे मेह, भीजे मारी चुंदडली:
एवो नीतरे कौमारनो नेह, भीजे मारी चुंदडली.
× × ×
आनंदकंद डोले सुन्दरीना वृदने
मीठा मृदंग पडछन्दा रे,
मंद मंद हेरे मीटडी मयंकनी,
हेरो मारा मधुरसचन्दा !
हो ! भीजे मारी चुंदडली.
3. घेल्लडो चित्तचोर
प्रीतमने दीठो'तो प्होर.

And yet another :

Do not ask me, pray, ask me not my heart's guarded secrets. Pearls and pearls are there in the sea of my heart. Pray, look not for them. Let none disturb them. Let no one ask me the guarded secrets of my heart.

The koel sings, the papaiya calls. Let not the searcher of causes look for them. Let no one ask me. In there, the letters of hope are writ with tears. They are faint ; pray wipe them not. Let no one ask me the guarded secrets of my heart.

Oh hero mine, whom the world adores ! Listen to me. Do not struggle against the flood which fate has released. Let no one ask me the guarded secrets of my heart.¹

The poet again and again deals with the delights of spring.

My soul ! My god ! Come ! The spring has arrived. On earth and in the sky, the divine coloured flowers bloom. Come and open the flower of my fate. My soul ! My god !

I smell and smell around me a mighty fresh desire. In my heart, a rich fragrance rises.

My soul ! My god !

શરદને આમલે ભીને વાન દીઠો, મીઠડલો એ મોર :
પ્રીતમને દીઠો'તો પ્હોર.

× × ×

હાથમાં રમાડતો'તો કમલની ડાંચલી,
કાઝજાડાની જ કોર : પ્રીતમને દીઠો'તો પ્હોર.

1. પૂછશો મા, કોઈ પૂછશો મા,
મારા હૈયાની વાતડી પૂછશો મા.
દિલના દરિયાવ મંહી કાંઈ કાંઈ મોતી:
ગોતી ગોતીને તેને ચૂંથશો મા :
મારા હૈયાની વાતડી પૂછશો મા.
ટહુકે છે કોકિલા, પુકારે છે પપૈયો:
કારણોના કામીને સૂઝશો મા :
મારા હૈયાની વાતડી પૂછશો મા.
આંસુનાં નીરના કો આશાના અક્ષરો
આછા આછા તોય લૂછશો મા :
મારા હૈયાની વાતડી પૂછશો મા.
જગના જોડા ! એક આટલું સુળી જજો:
પ્રારબ્ધનાં પૂર સામે ફક્કશો મા:
મારા હૈયાની વાતડી પૂછશો મા.

In the forest deep, the koel sings; and so did she in the depth of my heart. My soul! My god! In the garden of the world, Spring is playing about. Come, come to play in the garden of my heart. My soul! My god! ¹

The following, an adaptation of an old garabī, is addressed to the lover who is helping the gopī to churn the milk. This kind of help has been invested with romance by the classic precedent of Kṛṣṇa.

Lord! Churn the butter-milk with a lighter hand. This is not the way to churn it. The pot will break, lord! My colī ² will be wet, lord! And my necklace of pearls will break. The pot will break; the milk will flow; and the clothes of the fair one will be wet, lord!

Churn the buttermilk with a lighter hand.

The Jumnā overflows the pot! The ropes? Not so loose, Lord! I've kept the nectar in the little pot. Open it lightly. Taste it, pray my lord!

Lord! Churn the buttermilk with a light hand.³

1. ओ आत्मदेव !
 आवो, हो ! आवी वसंत आ.
 देवरंगी फूल उग्यां अवनीमां, आभमां;
 फूलडां उघाडो मुज भालमां:
 ओ आत्मदेव !
 म्हेक म्हेक म्हेके नववासना विराटनी;
 म्हेके सुगंधो अंगरंगमां:
 ओ आत्मदेव !
 वननां उंडाण भरी बोले छे कोकिला;
 बोली कोयल उरआभमां:
 ओ आत्मदेव !
 चन्दनचोक ढळे तेज केरी वादळी;
 तेज ए ढोळाय प्राणचोकमां:
 ओ आत्मदेव !
 रमती वसंत आज विश्व केरी वाडीअे;
 रमो मारी आंखना उद्यानमां:
 ओ आत्मदेव ! आवो, हो आवी वसंत आ.

2. Bodice.

3. हलके हाथे ते नाथ ! महिडां बलोवजो,
 महिडांनी रीत नोय आवी रे लोल.
 गोळी नन्दाशे, नाथ ! चोळी छंदाशे, नाथ !
 मोतीडांनी माळा तूटशे रे लोल;

XII

The author has published about eight dramas. Their principal feature is the use of a new, rhythmic, prose. It is rhymeless and without an iambus, akin to Walt Whitman's style but more artificially arranged. It has not yet been systematised and has brought many an admiring copyist to grief. But by inversion, compounding of words and frequent omission of verbs, the author has succeeded, at some places, in giving to Gujarātī a stateliness, which, in poems like the ode to Mahatma Gandhi, is reminiscent of the sonorous majesty of Milton. In Vāsantotsava and Auj and Agar (written earlier though published in 1933) the author uses this prose with captivating self-restraint. These works are also remarkable for the fresh and bewitching charm both of style and sentiment.

Nanalal modelled the framework of Jayājyanta on Dahyabhai Dholshaji's dramas on the stage. Their framework was made up of three acts, divided into six or seven scenes each; scenes were selected more as a background for good speeches than to assist the action; at convenient intervals, songs were interspered, faintly related in sentiment and expression to the context; declamation, speeches, description of what is happening on the stage and what in fact never happens, abounded; a plot was there but without unity, and mere types instead of human characters. But Nanalal made some striking improvement. His garabīs and songs were, of course, inimitable; and the disgusting by-plot was dropped. The characters talked the author's rhythmic prose; and their speeches were punctuated by neat reflections and aphorisms, or by poetic senti-

ગોઠી નન્દાશે ને ગોરસ વહી જશે,

ગોરીનાં ચીર પળ મીંજશે રે લોલ:

હલકે હાથે તે નાથ !

નાની શી ગોરસીમાં જમનાજી ઉછઠે

એવી ન નાથ ! દોરી રાખો રે લોલ;

નાની શી ગોરસીમાં અમૃત ઠારિયાં,

હલકે ઉઘાડી નાથ ! નાખો રે લોલ:

હલકે હાથે તે નાથ !

ments expressed in felicitous phrase. A novel feature was Yogins presiding over worlds; R̥shies flitting to and fro; sacred rivers purifying sinners; apsarās floating about, breathing lyrical atmosphere: an intangible tapestry of classic dreamland. And there was the ideal of Jayā and Jayanta, the young lovers, who for no earthly reason refuse to unite in wedlock; a breeze from the other-worldly gospel of Akho blowing gently through sweet-scented, modern verbiage. The attempt underlying the drama to bridge the gulf between the drama of literature and that on the stage, however, ended in a failure.

Jayājayanta and the works of the class are not dramas in the strict sense. The story is without a denouement, sometimes without action; and it is not presented in action by dialogue, as it should be, but by stage directions and recitals. The cheap use of supernatural elements destroys the sense of mystery. The dialogue is vague and monotonous, and never unfolds character. And men and women are mere abstractions.

What, then, is their literary form? These works, which are tiresome to peruse, become interesting if read aloud in the sing-song way in which purāṇikas tell stories and recite the anushtubha verse. It is an ākhyāna. The garabīs are there; the deśī in which the conversation was conducted is replaced by prose which could be chanted; the situation instead of being described in verse is given in prose enclosed in brackets; the kaḍavāṇ arrangement is redivided and called acts and scenes. The result is a sort of ākhyāna—khaṇḍa ākhyāna?—part prose, part verse,—a literary form to be recited and heard; not a drama to be presented in action, to be seen and heard.

In the later works of the type, the features of Jayā, jayanta are reproduced with but one change. The interest is sought to be maintained by the selection of a subject which has a romantic halo in history or mythology. Rājarsi Bharata has for its hero Śakuntalā's cakravartin son, and gives scope to the poet to express his views about ancient Āryan greatness. Indukumāra, for lack of such a subject, is not so interesting; and Premakunja is poor.

Viśvagītā, which the author in his preface claims to have modelled on the lines of the Bhāgavata, is a bunch of situations from several unconnected episodes, held together by the appearance of the sage Patanjali in the prologue, and again at the end, when the sage utters his famous aphorism, "Yoga means the cessation of the activities of the cognising aspect of the mind." It is not a piece of art. It reads like the troubled dream of a purāṇika, with the mythological tapestry of the Purāṇas all turned topsy-turvy, and some figures of the past mingling with one another in defiance of time, place and tradition. The work is only note-worthy for being the most irresponsible form of romantic effort, as also the high-water mark of Samskr̥tic revival, in the language. Jehangir-Nurjehan would have been more interesting; but with Jehangir quoting Śaṅkarācārya, Nurjehan playing Rādhā and Asafkhan talking bombastic Samskr̥tised Gujarātī, the general effect is very depressing. The songs are fine; and the rhapsodies about Gujarāta, Mogul Emperors, Nur Jehan and her love are in the author's characteristic style.

Saṅghamitrā as a khanda-ākhyāna is a decided improvement on its predecessors. The setting is splendid, what with Aśoka, Upagupta, Buddha and Sujātā. It gives unlimited scope for verbal fireworks. The dialogue is partly given in vṛttas, some of which, in spite of their metrical blunders, are charming. The khanda-kāvya of Manishankar Bhatt is thus absorbed in the khand-ākhyāna producing a novel art-form. The little drama of Buddha performed before Aśoka in Act IV is its most artistic portion.

[There is a flower-grove on the bank of the Nīranjanā. From the garden the sage enters; a flower of a man, withered by the heat of triple suffering. His body is worn by penance; his soul is fired by meditation; his eyes seek the unseen; his steps are slow, lest the earth may be burdened. Like the shadow of a divine cloud, he flits across the earth.]

THE SAGE: What to say now? Silence alone is good fortune. What is the light of the other world like? What is the web of deeds, good and bad? Why are light and shade, joy and sorrow formed? Do they tell the tale of lives lived long ago? ¹

1. परलोक प्रकाश शा हरे ? वा
शुं हरे जाळुं ज पुण्यपाप केरुं ?

Is world a solitary journey? Wherever I look for company, I find myself alone. My companions have left me. I look for thing which I do not find.

In the forest, in men, on the banks of flowing emptiness, in every place, in every eye, I search in vain for what I seek. How many strata I shall have to break up? ¹

[He speaks in a hoarse voice, as from the inner self, like the echo resounding from the forest groove.]

As many as the leaves in the groove. [Listens to the waters of the Niranjana and hears its gurgling sound.]

Every wavelet talks; Niranjana speaks mysteriously. Nature stands whispering the secret message with gurgling music of the water.² ... I cannot yet decipher this alphabet written by the waters of the Niranjana. On the deep-blue, eye-coloured slate of water, the wind has written its hymns: I cannot decipher them.³

[Rises and catches the rays of the sun in his folded hands. After a pause].

Are the hands full or empty? The light is in the hands and yet they have nothing in them. In the lines of my hand, the rays write something but I cannot read it.

The sun writes his message of light, filling the sky with splendour. Will some divine seer read the world's book of destiny, and teach it to the world? ⁴

XIII

Nanlal has been an iconoclast in the literature. He has claimed wide freedom in style, form, technique and subject. But he talks of elemental things and fails to create सुखदुःखनी तेजछाय शी आ ?

कसी जन्मान्तरनी कथा हसे ए ?

1. वनमां जनमां, शून्यना घाटघाटे,
किरणे किरणे, तारले तारले, ने
भाले भाले, आंखडी-आंखडीमां
मानवलोके शोधुं छुं जे छप्युं छे.
2. लहरी लहरी शुं बातडी
करी रही गेबी रवे निरंजना;
जळना कलबोल बोलती
प्रकृति उभी गूढ मंत्र गुंजती.
3. नीलचेरी नेत्ररंगी नीरनी पाटी उपरे
लख्या छे वायुए सूक्तो, हजी ए उकले नहि.
4. आकाशनी अंजलि तेजथी भरी
प्रकाशमन्त्रो लखतो प्रभाकर;
आ विश्व केरो विधिग्रन्थ वांचीने
को दिव्यद्रष्टा जगने पढावसे ?

them. Heroic simplicity, burning passion and tragic grandeur have eluded him. The subjective note never sounds clear and straight. He talks about love in all his works, surrounding it with flowery verbiage. It is however not a living, human reality. Its passion, its surrender and its anguish are beyond his creative art. In the same way, heroic passions are belauded, but not presented in action. The art which makes characters human has never been his. One of the features of extreme romanticism in literature is to indulge in an extravagance of words, images and ideas, and to refrain from the living human contact, lest the feet may touch the earth. It is found in Nanalal's works to a remarkable degree.

Nanalal's works are the products of the Samskr̥tic revival, with its glowing love for the past. Mansukhram represented it in language, Govardhanram in social philosophy, and Nanalal in the field of literary art. His works are alembics in which modern imagination is being fused with the golden elements of the Samskr̥tic. The result is often not very artistic for, the solvent of a vivid creative imagination is lacking. In a brilliant prose rhapsody like the essay on Brāhmanatva, and in his lecture on Indian History, we see him struggling through a mist of enthusiastic eulogies towards a vision of the Āryan spirit; but in his imaginative works, many of which are staged in the very midst of Puranic materials, he is so oppressed with their glare and profusion, that he misses their underlying beauty, rhythm and sublimity.

XIV

His Ushā is a story of little merit, but his other prose works contain some inspiring passages. His earlier prose style exhibits great distinction; but, in his later works, the prose is encroached upon by artificial arrangement or is broken up into verbless, fragmentary phrases or bare lists of names and events. Verbosity obscures both language and thought. His articles and addresses on Gujarātī poets present efforts at creative interpretation. Part I of the biography of his father, Kaviśvara Dalpatram, is a fulsome tribute paid by a devoted and admiring son.

Its value lies in the materials it contains for portraying the early decades of the nineteenth century.

But Nanalal has worked himself out of tune with his times. He stands as a fierce antagonist of the new life and thought in modern Gujarāta, and of the Gandhian upheaval. He is the champion revivalist who thunders anathemas at the rush of life and ideals which sweep past him, as he stands outraged at what he cannot understand.

XV

Janmashanker Mahashankar Buch, otherwise Lalit, (Born 1877) has written popular lyrics and songs, some of which are collected under the names of Sitā-Vanavas (1903), Lalitnān Kavyo (1912), Vaḍodarāne Vaḍale (1914), and Lalitnān Kavyo Part II (1932). They have caught the imagination of the public by their simplicity of language, and charm of sentiment and melody. Essentially, the poet is what a wandering bhagata was in old times, a humble saint-poet by the village well who sang of homely themes and homlier sentiments redolent with the fragrance of ever-green fields. His Madhuli, The Hut, has become popular as much by its literary quality as by the sentiment it expresses.

XVI

During the period, there was a large output of fiction. The historical novels which followed Karaṇa Ghelo were either translations or adaptations of English novels. Notable novels of the period include Icharam Suryaram's Gangā (1889), dealing with Śivāji's raid on Surat; Chunilal Vardhaman's Shah's Gujarātānī Junī Vartā (1893) and Sorathī Somanātha; Manilal Chabaram's Prithvīrāja Cohāṇa and Canda (1897); and Thakur Naranji Vassanji's Padmīnī (1901). Social novels were either adaptations from English or inspired by Sarasvaticandra. A remarkable novel of these periods was Vikramanī-Vismisadī, The Twentieth Century of Vikrama (1896), by Sattavala. Written in a pleasant and easy style, it describes life in Bombay vividly; and after a lapse of thirty-five years, one can still read it with interest. Bhogindrarao Divatia's novels like Ushākānta (1908) were at one time widely read. Generally they were pictures of social life framed in a plot adapted from some English novelist. Amrit Keśava Nayak's Eme-bana-ke, Being an M. A. (1908) adapted from Urdu, was the only novel between 1901 and 1914 which exhibited a striking departure from prevailing art.

XVII

The stage began to struggle into artistic shape during this period. The theatrical companies in Bombay, mainly controlled by the Parsis, staged plays full of gaudy and dazzling scenery with the help of actors who generally acted with vehement and unnatural emphasis. The traditions, however, of the Gujarātī stage were different, the Morbi and Vankaner Nāṭaka Samājas being the pioneers. Their plays followed the lines laid down by Ranchodhbhai. A play based on an episode from the Purāṇas like Candra-hāsa staged by The Morbi, a dramatic version of the life of Narsinha Mehta by The Vankaner, or a romantic play like Soubhāgyasundari by The Mumbāi Nāṭaka Samāja, though poor in technique and literary worth, roused great popular enthusiasm and exercised considerable influence on literature, and even other aspects of life. But in every play the pernicious tradition of presenting a loosely woven farce was maintained. The art was miserable, and its exhibition, often, disgusting.

Dahyabhai Dholshaji (1867-1906), however improved the technique and the literary tone of the drama by his plays which his company, The Deśī Nāṭaka Samāja, staged. Aśrumati, Udayabhāna and Viṇāveli, three of his plays were at one time the rage of the day. Songs set to popular tunes, long declamatory dialogues, highly coloured scenery, the indispensable farcical by-plot and the garabī became the indispensable elements of the play. Dahyabhai's songs introduced a literary flavour and lyric note in the stage drama and exerted great influence on the garabī and the song in literature. The garabī, the dance, which had fallen into disrepute, was rescued. The plots were mainly based on episodes from the Purāṇas and Hindu history; sometimes from contemporary life.

But after Dahyabhai's death, the influence of Amrita Keshava Naik began to be felt on the Gujarātī drama.

Outgrowing the vicious traditions of the Parsi stage, of which he was the product, he attained a level of histrionic art scarcely reached by any other actor on the Bombay stage. He was a part-composer of an Urdu play, Zerī Sāpa, The Venomous Serpent (1904), a violent melodrama of blood and passion. Vehement acting, glaring scenic arrangements, resonant speeches, elemental passions and choice music which characterized the play captured the imagination of the theatre-going world of Bombay for years. Unfortunately it influenced the Gujarātī stage for the worse, and drove away whatever little realism it had before. Scenery became incongruous; Gujarātī was often spoken in rhyming couplets like the beta in Urdu; acting, already unnatural, became hideous. A race of playwrights and stage directors came into existence which never could outgrow the influence of Zerī Sāpa. And the drama on the stage and in literature became two distinct literary forms, no doubt to the detriment of both.

XVIII

Another literary activity of the period was towards reclaiming the valuable literature of Old Gujarāta. Manilal Dvivedi was employed by the Gaekvāḍa to edit some works recovered from the old bhaṇḍāras of Jain temples at Pāṭapa. Hargovandas Kantavala, also with the same help, rendered great service to literature by editing and publishing old works in a series called the Pracīna-kāvya-mālā. Narmad's efforts in this line were continued by Ichharam Suryaram, who published a well-edited series of similar works under the heading of Kāvya Dohana. And the study of the older poets exerted a steady influence on the literature of the period.

With the growth of public opinion, journalism began to develop as a distinct form. The dailies in Bombay, in the hands of their Parsi proprietors, furnished news no doubt, but had no pretensions to literary standard. Among the weeklies, Ichharam Suryaram's Gujarātī favoured progress in politics and conservatism in social matters. Its literary activities included novels, which were either published serially or as presents to subscribers. It had a large circulation even in other parts of the world where commercial enterprize had led the Gujarātīs. The short-lived Śakti of Surat, the organ of the extreme politicians in Gujarāta in the days of the Surat Congress of 1907, was the pioneer of vigorous political journalism. The monthly journals were usually the mouthpieces of well-known literary men, the notable being Sudarśana edited by Manilal Dvivedi, Samālocaka edited by Govardhanram, *Vasanta*¹ by Prof. Anandashankar Dhruva, and Buddhiprakāśa,¹ by the Gujarāta Vernacular Society, and Jñānasudhā, by Ramanbhai.

XIX

Between 1900 and 1915 Ranajitram Vavabhai (1882-1917) exercised considerable influence on literature, though his own literary output was limited. He wrote essays and short stories, and collected folksongs and materials for a history of Gujarāta. His enthusiasm for the literature and history of the province helped many authors to give their best to the language. He founded a number of literary societies, the premier of which, the Gujarātī Sāhitya Parīśad, held its first sessions in 1905 at Ahmedabad, Govardhanram Tripathi presiding. He was the first to analyse the national characteristics possessed by Gujarātīs and to point out their lines of development in his famous essay, Gujarātānī Ekatā.

1. Still being published.

CHAPTER IV

MAHĀTMĀ GANDHI AND THE TRIUMPH OF ĀRYAN CULTURE.

Nationalism—Mahātmā Gandhi (Born 1869)—Triumphant Gujarāta—Mahātmā's works—His prose—Navajivana—Ātmakathā—Patro—His teachings—Truth and Non-violence—Their place in corporate life—Literary tendencies—Kākā Kalelkar (Born 1886)—His style—His imagination—His outlook—His faith in Āryan civilisation—Swadeshidharma.

The present period commences with the beginning of the European war in 1914. In these twenty years, Gujarāta has been transformed from a small province of India into the home of a heroic people, who, leading the movement for Indian freedom, occupy an outstanding position in the world. Two great influences brought about this miracle: The world situation and Mahātmā Gandhi. Interacting, they have changed values in every sphere of life including literature and culture.

I

The great European War had the effect of enriching the Gujarātis all over the country. Their concerns in Bombay, Ahmedabad, Karachi, Calcutta, Burma and Africa attained an unprecedented prosperity, and gave them a new sense of power and importance. They also realized, as never before, the intimate relation between political freedom and economic progress. And when, in 1915, Mrs. Besant began to agitate for Home Rule for India, they were ready to respond to her call. A band of young Gujarātis in Bombay stormed the Presidency Association, the stronghold of Sir Pherozshaw Mehta; started an English weekly, Young India; organised the Bombay branch of the Home Rule League with Mahomadali Jinnah as the president; and carried on an intensive agitation in Bombay and Gujarāta. Within a short time, the Gujarātis became politically alert, and the Bombay branch came to dominate the inner councils of the Indian National Congress.

The entry of the U. S. A. in the War, and the great services rendered by India to Great Britain forced the British Government to announce, on August 20, 1917, a policy, which had for its object 'the progressive realization of responsible government in India.' The avowed objects of the War and the energy of the late Mr. Edwin Montague, the then Secretary of State for India, in implementing the policy raised high hopes among politically minded Indians. But they were dashed to the ground when, the War over, Great Britain busied herself with strengthening her hold over India. In 1919 the fateful Rowlatt Acts were passed. They were received by the indignant country as a breach of faith. Thwarted hopes soon led to universal resentment.

II

In 1914 Mahātmā Gandhi, (Born 1869) with the record of a victorious struggle in South Africa, returned to India. His quaint approach to life and politics and his opposition to political agitation during the war made him unpopular at first. But he made Ahmedabad his headquarters, collected a small, devoted band of workers round him, and began to popularise the cult of the charkha and Satyāgraha. Having won his first victory in Behar in 1917, he won another the next year in Gujarāta in the Kairā Satyāgrah. The next year, he was at the head of the Home Rule League and the editor of the Young India and the Gujarātī Navajivana.

England's mistake in passing the Rowlatt Acts was Mahātmā Gandhi's opportunity. His napoleonic achievements in the field of Indian politics between 1919 and 1922 left him the supreme figure in Indian life and politics. Incidentally, he organised some villages, intensified the political consciousness of the people in Gujarāta, and consolidated the partnership in politics between the Gujarātī politician, business man and peasant. He also founded the Gujarāta Vidyāpīṭha at Ahmedabad, and the scholars who joined it in the beginning stimulated the intellectual life of that city. Gujarātīs, all over the world, felt proud of so great a man and backed all his activities. Political ambition and work became the dominant passion of their life.

In March, 1922, the Mahātmā was convicted of sedition, and sentenced to six years' imprisonment but, owing to his uncertain health, was released in 1924. A section of Congressmen had, in the meantime, decided to participate in the new legislatures. And though he had the confidence of the majority party in the Congress, he let the minority have its own way. The majority, under his direction, lent themselves to constructive work, the spread of the charkha, the removal of the drink evil and untouchability, and the organisation of the villages. The last activity, in his hands, meant an intensive organisation of the masses through an educative propaganda by devoted workers trained in his methods and living in the midst of their flock.

MAHATMA GANDHI

In 1927, when rain and flood devastated many parts of the province, the organisation which he had so built up ably assisted the Government in carrying relief to the distressed. In 1928 it enforced the surrender of Government on a question of land revenue by leading mass Satyāgraha in the Bardoli Taluka. The solid support given to this campaign by the Gujarātis from all parts of the country, attested to their organised strength. Bardoli involved a still greater moral triumph. The solidarity, heroism and sacrifice of eighty thousand souls was a unique phenomenon in Indian history. Bardoli has been the Thermopylæ of Satyāgraha, and has few parallels in the history of the world, ancient or modern.

Bardoli gave the political weapons of Mahātmā Gandhi a fresh edge, and to political India a new message of hope. In the Simon Commission, England gave him one more chance to try the efficacy of the weapon. The Mahātmā's historic march to Dandi on the 12th March 1930 stirred Gujarāta to depths unknown before. His path was one track of living flame across the province. A dazzling phenomenon of a spontaneous outbreak of heroism followed. The Gujarātis all over the world responded, and none so energetically as those in Bombay. Bombay justified its boast of being urbs prima Indis, and for the moment aspired to rank with cities which have changed the destinies of nation. From everywhere the Gujarātis offered at the altar of Satyāgrah men, women and children, wealth and lands, prospects and profits. In 1931 the Gandhi-Irwin truce was signed and the Mahātmā went to represent the Indian nation at the second sessions of the Indian Round Table Conference. About the end of 1931 the Mahātmā returned to India and, soon afterwards, Government introduced the ordinance regime. Government arrested him on the 4th of January 1932 and a strenuous struggle began between the Congress and the Government of India. Locked up in the Yeravda jail and single-handed, he then began to combat tremendous forces by sheer force of spiritual strength. On the 20th of September 1932 he went on 'his fast unto death' in order to undo the wrong which the British Premier had inflicted upon the Hindu community by cutting it into two. It moved India and many parts of the world to its innermost depths; the conscience of the Hindu community was awakened; and the British Premier was compelled to revise his award so as to leave the Hindu community one and undivided. The Yeravda Pact is, perhaps, the greatest event in the history of Modern India.

Thereafter, the Mahātmā organised from jail a campaign to remove untouchability. In May 1933 he held communion with God and went on a self-purificatory fast of twenty one days. He had to be released in consequence, but, on his decision to resume individual Civil Disobedience, Government arrested him again on 1st of August, and refused to give him the permission he had enjoyed during his last imprisonment to carry on the Harijan campaign unrestricted in jail. He went on a fast again and was released. Pursuant to his vow, he then conducted a whirlwind campaign throughout the country for the removal of untouchability; and within so short a time as one year defied time and space and the demands of health to carry to the most remote villages his message of hope to the socially submerged. History knows of a Buddha preaching his gospel of Nirvāṇa far and wide in the course of a long life and a Peter the Hermit delivering his fiery message of the Crusades across Europe; but this generation has seen with its eyes what centuries have found it difficult to imagine: a prophet in one year by his quickening inspiration stimulating the conscience of so vast and slow-moving a society and re-shaping the life of millions. On the 28th

October 1934, he retired from the Congress amidst the regrets of an adoring nation.

He is no longer of the earth ; he is a Vedic Ṛshi.

III

These influences have led to wonderful results. The Gujarātīs have thrown off the fetters riveted by political slavery, social isolation and religious bigotry. They have developed a sense of power, freedom and self-respect. They no longer suffer from a inferiority complex. Fatalism, born of helplessness, oppresses them no longer. Their social and religious outlook has become elastic enough to grapple with all the complex situations of modern existence. Caste has become but an incident of life, and does not weigh them down, stifling energy and change.

Gujarāti women no longer stand dumb, perplexed and helpless. They have stormed the citadels of power, and struggled with burly sergeants in defence of the national flag. They have suffered for freedom, and, through picketing and processions, through the terrors of the jail and the lathi charge, won their equality with men. They have retained their delicacy, purity, and grace, and yet, are as free as women in many so-called advanced countries in the world.

The Gujarātīs, with business habits extending over centuries, have always been calculating, but the arithmetic of their life has become very comprehensive. They have found in wealth an instrument of tremendous power in modern life—a sword in war, in peace a ploughshare. They have realised its inter-dependance with political power, and placed theirs at the service of the nation. At the same time, they have been shaped into a compact race ; an organic whole with a strong collective will. More, they have forgotten the sorrows of six centuries and acquired a background of heroic traditions. Sābarmatī and Bardoli, Borsad and Rās, the squares and roads of Bombay have been hallowed by struggle and sacrifice. An elemental note of heroism has come into their life and history.

And thus, like unto the Prophet of Israel, has Mahātmā Gandhi led his people out of bondage.

IV

Mahātmā Gandhi's works in Gujarātī may be classified under three heads : (i) the articles in Navajivana ; (ii) Ātmakathā, Autobiography ; (iii) Dakṣiṇa Africānā Satyāgrahano Itihāsa ; (iv) Arogya Viśe Sāmānya Jñāna ; (v) and Patro, Letters, only some of which have been published so far. Since he became the editor of the weekly Navajivana till it stopped in 1932, week after week except when in jail, he has addressed to the Gujarātīs his views and theories, his sermons, confidences, and battle-cries. Few other newspapers in the world have had a similar popularity and influence in their area of circulation as this small, unostentatious sheet which never screamed a headline and never published an advertisement. With many, it replaced the novel and the Purāṇa in interest. A single copy of this weekly has often brought to a distant hamlet its only journal and gospel of life.

Mahātmā Gandhi has given to Gujarātī prose a new sense of power. His vocabulary has been drawn from many sources. His style, though sometimes loosely woven in construction, is direct, clear and easily comprehensible, the result of precise thinking and an incessant effort to avoid the devious by-paths of rhetoric and sophistry. An unerring sense of proportion keeps both expression and imagination under judicious restraint. The literary element is always subordinated to the author's prime motive, which is to touch the living chord in the reader's heart and vivify him into action. Sometimes, and particularly in Ātmakathā, the style carries itself with grace. The charms are disposed of well and wisely, and become part of the general effect, not the main source of it. His thunder acquires a severe majesty, his appeal its persuasiveness, his confession its poignancy, as much by a proper use of the proper word as by his personality. Sometimes, he is slyly humorous or playful. But he prefers monotony of expression to a varied literary effect. With him, beauty of expression has to be a humble house-maid to Truth. And the reader invariably falls under the spell of 'the bare, sheer, penetrating power of every line,' of his, which, under the stress of some great emotion, attains biblical strength.

V

The articles published in Navajivana deal with almost every serious aspect of human conduct. They are not leaders in the journalistic sense, but, in their technique, have a tendency to approach a variety of forms, from an informal chat to an address. Every one of them is sober. Imagination is always curbed by a stern adherence to hard facts, marshalled with fairness. Restraint and sincerity invest every line with moral dignity, making any other view look morally imperfect. These articles establish a living contact with the reader. They draw a picture when necessary, but only in subdued tones. Long or short, every one of them presents the well-defined outline of a living vision which the author alone can see and materialise. It is this feature which gives to the smallest note in Navajivana its compelling power. Many of his articles have been rendered into English, and published in Young India or in book-form; and even in their English version they give a fairly correct idea of their literary value.

He responds to nature but not with the abandon of an artist. While on the Brahmaputrā he wrote :

The steamer is gliding on the river. We are all sitting on the deck. The river looks wide as the sea. We can see the banks, far away on either side; the distance between the two may be two miles or a little over. The voyage will take about fifteen days. Sublime peace has descended on the river. The moon, hidden behind the clouds, spreads a soft light over the waters. The propellers, even as they cut their way through the water, hum sweetly. Except for this hum, peace is over everything and everywhere. I alone have no peace of mind. The steamer is not mine, the river is not mine. I travel in the steamer through the courtesy of the power of which I am tired, which has made India decrepit, lustreless, poor.

Few passages in literature possess the intensity and grace of the moving appeal which he issued to Gujarāta in 1922.

Let him who wants, come. Let him who can, join the fray. Everyone is invited, but the hungry alone shall come to the feast. Others, even if they come, will only be sorry. He who has no hunger, will not relish even sweets. The hungry will relish even a dry crust of bread. Likewise, those who understand non-co-operation can alone stand by it. He who understands finds things easy. For those who do not, everything is difficult. What is the use of a mirror to the blind?

The times are difficult. Let us not take a thoughtless step, lest we may rue it.....Civil disobedience of laws ! We are no longer ignorant of it. Jail is its inevitable destination. And we can court it. Many have gone there, undergone its hardships, and returned. Why can we not do as much? It is not so difficult. But—?

But if martial law is declared? If Gurkhas come? If Tommy Atkins comes? Suppose they bayonet us, shoot us, make us crawl? They are welcome. Let them come. But if we are asked to crawl? Then too, we must be ready to die rather than crawl. We shall then only die by the bayonet instead of the plague. We are not likely to run away, if we are fired on; we have now acquired so much strength that we will receive the bullets on our chests, like playthings. We shall convert the Gurkhas into our brothers. If not, what happiness is greater than dying at the hands of a brother? Even as we say this, we feel proud.

But if—

I am confident this time that timid Gujarāta will show its mettle. But as I write, my pen is heavy. Whenever did Gujarāta hear gunshots? When did it see rivers of blood flowing? Will Gujarāta withstand shots fired like crackers? Heads broken like earthen pots? If Gujarāta sees other heads broken, it will feel glorious. When it sees its own head broken, it will be immortal. Why do you want training? Confidence! You will never acquire confidence by a Congress resolution. It is God who helps the weak. God alone gives courage. Whom Rāma protects, none can injure. He has given us the body. Let Him, if he wants, take it away. Even if you so desire you cannot treasure up this body. Like money, it has to be spent in noble acts. What nobler occasion for giving up life than when you are combating this atrocity? Whoever believes thus sincerely, will receive bullets with his bare chest, his face smiling.

The literary art is made use of in every one of these sentences with consummate success, and yet the principal object of inspiring the reader to action is never lost sight of.

Our difficulties are as great as the Himālayas. But great though our difficulties are none the less great are the remedies at our disposal. We are descended from an ancient race. We have witnessed the decline of the civilizations of Rome, Greece and Egypt. Our civilization had, like the sea, its ebb and tide; but like the sea it has continued changeless. We have in the country all necessary equipments to make life self-contained. It has high mountains and rivers. It has an abundance of natural beauty. Its sons have left us a legacy of glorious exploits. This land is the storehouse of ascetic ideals. Here, all religions live side by side. Here alone, all gods command veneration. With such advantages, if we cannot teach the world the lessons of peace by some extraordinary deed, if we cannot win the English by our pacific activities we will have disgraced our inheritance. Our connection with the English, then, would have been wasted. The English are enterprising. They are religious. They have self-confidence. They are a race of heroes. They work for freedom. But the spirit of commerce dominates them. They have not always thought of the moral value of the means employed by them to acquire wealth. They worship modern civilization. They have forgotten ancient ideals. We need not copy them. If we do not forget what is ours, if we love our own culture, if we have a firm faith in its pre-eminence, we will turn our relations with them to good use and render it beneficial to them as well as to the world.

VI

Mahātmā Gandhi's Ātmakathā, Autobiography, or as it is called, 'My Experiments with Truth' is a recognised masterpiece in the autobiographical literature of the world. Any summary of its contents here is unnecessary as the work has, ere now, been translated into many languages. The overshadowing personality and achievements of the author render a literary estimate of the work rather difficult. It is a narrative of his struggles to introduce Truth as a dominant principle of life. Its language, though monotonous at times, presents Gujarātī in one of its best forms; a racy vehicle for compact literary expression. A perfect sense of proportion characterises every line. The story is told with great skill and energy. All excrescences have been cut out; every incident contributes to the breathless interest of the narrative. Some incidents of one of the most romantic lives are thus brought out in relief. The author, as a child, stealing a part of the servant's ornament and then confessing it to a loving father; his father's last illness during which he escapes from the patient's room to his own bedroom; his trying to turn into a sartorial gentleman when in England; his being thrashed by a European on his first arrival in Pretoria; his treatment by the colonists on his arrival at Durban; and such other equally well-known incidents are described with an art which many novelists might envy. The facts are presented effectively. Fewest possible words, deftly arranged, suffice to paint a striking picture. Conversation is natural, though it scarcely throbs with life. Characters have not the promethean spark breathed into them, but are drawn by touches just sufficient to bring out their outstanding features.

As a specimen of literary art, it has its place among the best works in Gujarātī prose. Its value as an autobiography arises from two things: the intensely susceptible and rich nature of the author, and his ceaseless struggle with it in every sphere of life. Both are laid bare with a transparent frankness which makes the work at once so interesting and so inspiring. One is naturally reminded of Goethe's Truth and Beauty in My Life and Rousseau's Confessions. Mahātmā Gandhi is quite as detached as Goethe, if not more, in reviewing his past life. Ātmakathā certainly lacks the great literary charm of the other two works. It has sincerity but not abandon, literary technique but not literary beauty. It is not the expression of an exuberant temperament but of an effort to control it. It has a hard metallic quality which the other two are free from. Goethe reveals the struggles through which he waded to an artistic detachment; Rousseau tells us of his clumsy dance through life with the thrill of unforgotten joy in his voice; Mahātmā Gandhi describes only the ruthlessness with which he repressed himself. We appreciate the one; we love the other; we revere the last. What detracts from the literary greatness of the Ātmakathā scarcely affects its value as one of the most precious of human documents.

VII

When Mahātmā Gandhi's letters come to be published, they will fill volumes of valuable literature. Every letter is a perfect gem, well and appropriately worded, with a ringing note of candour. They are models of conciseness. Many are playful; some loving. Many administer a paternal rebuke; some, with indescribable restraint, hit, and hit well; a few are intimate; scarcely any throbs with the impulse of an unguarded moment. The author adjusts the tone, the language and the perspective of every letter with uncanny precision so as to have the desired effect on the addressee. These letters have provided him with his greatest instrument of controlling the conscience and conduct of his friends and adherents. No man has wielded so great an influence through his letters; and few literary men have written theirs with such art. It is rarely that one comes across such an inimitable epistle as the one he wrote from the Yeravda Jail to the children of the Sabarmati Āśrama.

Ordinary birds cannot fly without wings. With wings, of course, all can fly. But if you, without wings, will learn how to fly, then all your troubles will indeed be at an end. And I will teach you.

See, I have no wings, yet I come flying to you every day in thought. Look, here is little Vimala, here is Hari, and here Dharmakumar. And you also can come flying to me in thought.

There is no need of a teacher for those who know how to think. The teacher may guide us but he cannot give us the power of thinking. That is latent in us. Those who are wise get wise thoughts.

Tell me who, amongst you, are not praying properly in Prabhubhai's evening prayer.

Send me a letter signed by all and those who do not know how to sign may make a cross.

Bapu's blessings.

Yeravda Palace,
Silence day.

VIII

It is, indeed, difficult to interpret the writings of Mahātmā Gandhi in a few lines. In the first instance, few, indeed, would have thought in 1914 when he returned from Africa that within a few years, a man almost superhuman in vision and conduct would preside over an āśrama at Sābarmatī: that the mahāvratas would be observed by him as by the sages of mythology; that he would forge with them a comprehensive movement for achieving national strength and international dignity; that through him the idealism of India would stand vindicated as the means of the world's salvation. But facts stranger than fiction have come to pass. In daily conduct and current literature, truth, non-violence, and stern self-discipline are recognised not as ideals but living realities. And in a new wave of nationalism, India has found her soul.

Nothing but Truth has existence. Hence the definition of God is sat. To me, Truth is the sovereign principle, which includes all principles. This truth is not only truthfulness in words, but truthfulness in thought also, and not only the relative truth of our conception, but the Absolute Truth, the Eternal Principle, that is God.

Of late, a life spent in search of this principle has led him a step further. 'God is Truth' is now replaced by the formula that 'Truth alone is God, a living Almighty Force.' This Truth is the end of all efforts. It is to be attained only by an increasing surrender of self and all its values. The path of surrender is along the five vratas, fundamental to Āryan culture: Non-violence, Truth, Non-stealing, Sexual Self-control, and Non-possession. It is to be pursued with humility, at all times, in thought, word and deed. Its greatest foe is self-satisfied materialism with its results, luxury, strife, industrialism, avarice, egotism.

This Truth is not a philosophical ideal to be realised in forests and caves. It has to be pursued actively in all departments of life; in the villages and the slums, in the solution of individual, social and political problems. In the course of this pursuit, every detail has to be attended to, practical wisdom applied, and manual labour lifted to a position of dignity. The affairs of man including politics have to be purged of untruth and sordidness. Men and women have to be free and equal, subject only to the law of truth and service. Suffering, voluntarily invited, and stern discipline have to replace strife. Revolutions have to be achieved by organisation. War, the monstrous child of a godless materialism, has to be replaced by Love. A humble religious attitude of mind has to replace the arrogance underlying modern life. Truth and non-violence, no longer the impossible standards of ethics, have to inspire collective activities, raising struggling nations, eliminating exploitation, breathing into international affairs a new hope. The poor, the miserable and the down trodden are Daridranārāyaṇa, the Divine manifested in the miserable, and are to be worshipped with devotion and service. Human life, reared on self-imposed renunciation, is to be a romance full of joy.

Satya, Truth, when working out these results actively, is Satyāgraha. Passive resistance, civil disobedience and non-co-operation are its different phases. It is suffering, openly invited and cheerfully borne, in vindication of Truth. It abhors hate and injustice as much as secrecy and diplomacy.

Satyāgraha is Love. The law of Love, call it attraction, affinity, cohesion if you like, governs the world. Life persists in face of death. The Universe persists in spite of destruction continually going on. Truth triumphs over untruth. Love conquers hate. God eternally triumphs over Satan. A Satyāgrahī has no power he can call his own. All the power he may seem to possess is from God.

Thus Īśvarapranidhāna, the attitude of conscious and willing surrender to God's will, found in saints and martyrs, inspires individual and collective action. This outlook and method are the proud heritage of Āryan culture. India lives for and through them. Her freedom is but a step towards their becoming world-forces.

After the fiery ordeals of recent years, who dare say that these are impossible ideals?

These teachings have given a new direction to literary currents. Mahātmā Gandhi's inexorable demand of himself and others is that every human activity should directly lead to moral and social good. Imagination revolving in shapes and things of tempting beauty, has no place in his scheme of things. He is the foe of anarchy and individualism, and will not admit the value of romance which does not keep close to the earth. His insistent emphasis on truth challenges the earlier values in art and life. Man's function is to become a unit of an organised whole, except in so far as it is necessary to achieve individual moral triumph. Joy of life, not arising from a sense of duty fulfilled, has no right to exist. Power born of truth, self-discipline and service is the supreme good. Beauty apart from it has little or no significance.

These teachings, coupled with Mahātmā Gandhi's indifference to literature as such, has led some to interpret them to mean that the language of literature should be that of the man in the street and that the only test of literature is its immediate usefulness to the masses. His works, however, do not warrant any such inference.

IX

Dattatraya Balkrishna Kalelkar (Born 1886), popularly known as Kaka Kalelkar, may be included in this chapter, as his literary work is characterised more by the literary tendencies for which Mahātmā Gandhi stands than by those which the main currents of Gujarātī literature exhibit. His works are: Himālayano Pravāsa, Journey to the Himalayas (1923); Kalelkarnā Lekho, Writings of Kalelkar (1924), being a large volume consisting of articles on diverse subjects; Otarāh Divālo, Northern Walls (1925) being the author's experience in jail; Pūrvuranga (1923); Smaranayātrā (1934), author's reminiscences; and Lokamata (1934), being collection of descriptive articles on the rivers of India. The miscellaneous writings can broadly be classified as (a), character sketches; (b) essays on Hindu festivals, places of pilgrimage and purānic episodes; (c) articles on educational and social subjects, on literature, arts and politics. Many of these were published in the weekly Navjivana, while he was its editor during the absence of Mahātmā Gandhi in jail.

For a Maharāshtrian by birth and education, his command over the language is phenomenal. His style is flexible, direct, expressive; of fastidious workmanship, uniformly maintaining a high level of idiomatic charm. It indulges in Samskr̥tic graces without effort or pedantry. Its richness is due as much to the influence of Samskr̥ta as to the imaginative element of the author's temperament. Often, it has the quiet manner of a teacher expounding his subject; sometimes, as in the Otarati-Dwalo, it is light and playful. It never yields to the temptation of being blunt or colloquial. On occasions it rises to an eloquence not often surpassed by the recognised masters of Gujarātī prose. Kaka recoils as much from the oppressive, concentrated directness of the Mahātmā as from the florid extravagance of some of the romantic authors of the day.

Though his approach to problems had been moulded into definite shape long before he came under Mahatma Gandhi's influence, he accepts the two great canons of the latter's cult: first, that literary art must directly tend to moral or social good; and secondly, that it must be based on facts. But Kaka's vivid imagination and love of romance flow together vigorously within the rocky banks of those two canons. He is a good story-teller; many of his essays narrate a Puranic or a historic incident, or an incident from experience with vivid charm. His Himālayano Pravāsa, at some places, reads like a novel. He often invests realities with his imagination till they shine with the attractive hue of romance.

The author's imagination is richly infused with associations of ancient India. His memory is full of images which a life-long study of Samskr̥ta literature only can provide. Without any effort, he can see in modern life traces of gorgeous Puranic tints, which he calls living history. It is only a romantic author's eye which can see in the Himālayas all that the author has seen. His puritanic attitude in literature does not permit him to tread the path of pure imagination, but it is neither harsh nor unpleasing. He has the restless spirit of a literary vagabond who loves the open air, the great silent spaces, the lonely towering heights. He yearns for the life of the great sādhus who roam unrestricted over hill and valley seeking communion with nature. He loves nature, not as a lover, but as a philosopher. In the tree, in the river, in the forest, he seeks the hidden meaning, the message of ancient Ṛshis who people his imagination. Within the four walls of the jail, he can love the ant, the bird, the cat, the ancient tree awaiting death. He can establish friendly relations with them; he can shed a tear over their misery. With a classic quotation, he can narrate the cruel incident of the prisoner cutting grass in front of his cell. Aided by a quotation from Śakuntala, he can examine the nest of a crow. Oṭṛālī Dīvālō is one of the finest things in our literature; we see in it a literary Jacques sucking wisdom out of the most insignificant incident of jail life.

X

Kaka represents the high-water mark of Samskr̥tic influence. He has no mere justificatory attitude with reference to Āryan culture or institutions. At no time can you imagine him to be anything but a Brāhmaṇa steeped in śāstric lore. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa, Bali and Gaya live and move in the world which surrounds him. Conflict with the Āryan conception of life is either error or sin. Classic associations are to him living history. There is but one law in life, the law of Dharma.

The message of Indian history for him is very simple.

The ideal of the Indian people is religious life. Hence, in spite of diversity of creeds, there is a unity of the ultimate ideal of the individual and society. The direction of attaining this ideal is also the same. This provides the unity to the view-point and conduct of the whole people.

He attributes the greatness and permanence of Hindu culture to—the ascetic who has given up all worldly contact; who has converted the fruit overhanging his hut into a beggar's bowl; who has coloured his clothes with red earth; who has offered to the world the cup of immortality and religion with the words. Not with wealth, not with progeny, but with self-abnegation alone can immortality be attained.

His appreciative portraits of two ascetics whom he met in the Himālayas, is a fitting tribute to that much-maligned race of itinerant Mahātmās who have contributed so greatly to the growth and permanence of Āryan culture. Admiration for ancient Indian practices takes the author even to the length of extolling the suicidal leap which devout enthusiasts take into eternity by jumping off Bhairav Ghati, a crag in the Himālayas. He holds this act to be praise-worthy, as it is inspired by a 'desire to merge oneself into the glorious beauty of nature', to be 'in tune with the infinite, forgetting the bondage of this contemptible body.' The author adds: "Sometimes death is the true glory of life".

He has accepted Mahātmā Gandhi's guidance, for, in him the author has found the teacher who could effectively preach the gospel of Sanātana Dharma.

Now shall end all strife; hatred will disappear; and spiritual greatness will triumph. Whether Mahātmā Gandhi is a World Teacher or a precursor of such a Teacher, a morning star heralding his arrival, I do not know. I do not even want to know this. The night is at an end. There is light all over. To those who have faith, this ought to be enough. I do not compare Mahātmā Gandhi with Mahāvira, Buddha or Śrī Kṛṣṇa. But the religion he has preached is the essence of Jainism, Buddhism and Bhāgavata Dharma and is, therefore, superior to them all."

XI

This wonderfully self-confident attitude, so unfamiliar to Gujarātī literature, can only be attributed to the author's birth and education in a part of the country where orthodox Hinduism flourishes in strength. The solution which he offers in his Swadeshidharma for ills afflicting modern India provides a comprehensive gospel of Swadeshism. It is a creed which has for its object an Indian India. The exigencies of progress, the international struggle for existence the difficulties which beset political life have no terror for him. In valuing life, he insists on an exclusively swadeshi measure. 'The question is not of the hand which uses it, but of the nature of the measure used'. He has no sympathy for young Gujarāta, which has started obliterating caste distinctions. He appeals to it to utilise the institution for warding off the calamity of national servitude.

I try to visualise the ideals which are behind the caste. I firmly believe that this unique institution created by the Āryan race and preserved for thousands of years is not intended to be consigned to the grave-yard.

He is remorselessly logical. He is against modern education, and would prefer not to teach English to students. Even international trade is a sin. Exports and imports are as much anathemised as the study of foreign language and culture. Nay more, he cannot but view with surprise the growing fondness for love-marriage in Gujarāta.

How did Gujarāta acquire this fondness for love-marriage? Is it a quality inherent in the land? Is it the inheritance of Śrī Kṛṣṇa? Is it a fruit of the bhakti of teachers like Vallabha? Or, is it an Indian colony of the European empire of Swedenborg? Or is sufi love brought here, laden on the back of poets like Kalapi, from the land of gazals?

One can easily understand how modern Gujarāta, bubbling over with a fresh, free life, and permeated with the spirit of renaissance, finds it difficult to appreciate Kaka Kalelkar.

CHAPTER V

MODERN TENDENCIES. Part I: MUNSHI.

(1914-1934)

Kanaiyalal Maneklal Munshi (Born 1887)—Works—His technique—Veranī Vasulāta—Kono Vāṅka ?—Swapnāśrīṣṭā—Suchasambhāṣā—Trilogy of Paṭāṇarī, Prabhutā, Gujarātano Nāṭha and Rājādhirāja—Prithivīvallabha—Purāṇic dramas—Dhruvaswaminīdevī—Social drama—Ajñānīkṛtā—Kākānī Shashī—Brahmacaryāśrama—Miscellaneous prose works—Philosophy of literature and life—Thodāṅka Rasadarśano—Śiśu ane Sakhi.

Modern Gujarātī literature shows great richness and variety. Irresponsible flights of the romantic tendency have been brought under control. Human nature and experience, in true proportions, now attracts authors. Dramatic presentation of life is no longer an unknown art; humour is coming into its own. The novel, the short story, and the drama have attained distinctive form; literary art has acquired greater freedom, a more skilful, technique, a higher creativeness.

I

[It was an unexpected honour to be asked to write about Munshi in the present work. Obviously it would have been bad taste for a writer—anybody except, perhaps, Bernard Shaw—to write at length about himself. And Munshi has certainly not got the false modesty of leaving himself out in any survey of our modern literature. And when he asked me to write about him, I undertook to do so with great pleasure. The reader will of course notice the difference in style and treatment.—I. J. S. Taraporevala.]

Kanaiyalal Maneklal Munshi (Born 1887) occupies a prominent place in modern Gujarātī literature. This versatile writer came before the public in 1913-14, as if afraid of his reception, under the pen-name Ghanaśyāma. The promise of his first venture, Veranī Vasulāta (1913-1914), which indicated the rise of an author of the first magnitude in the language has been more than fulfilled, for Munshi has, in the last two decades, given to Gujarāṭa work after work of great brilliance,

Born of a respectable Brāhmaṇa family of Broach, he passed through the usual studies at school and college, and came out as a lawyer in 1913. Law, he has accepted as his profession, but his love is for Mother India; and he has striven to fulfil this love, among other things, through literature. The crowning blessing of his life, however, came when, after the death of his first wife, he married his present wife, Lilavati, and found in her his twin-soul. Munshi's has been a life of strenuous work and multifold activities. He spent busy days in the University of Bombay, in the Bombay Legislative Council, and in the High Court; and found time and energy to edit the monthly Gujarāta, and to pour forth an uninterrupted stream of essays, stories, plays and novels. In 1930 he joined the Congress and has spent over two years in jail.

Munshi's works may be considered in classified groups as under :—

1. Social and semi-political novels: Veranī Vasulāta, Revenge Accomplished, (1913-14), Kono Vāṅka?, Who is Guilty?, (1915-16), Svapnadr̥ṣṭa, The Dreamer (1924-25), and Snehasambhrama, Confusion in Love (1931-32).

2. Historical romances comprising the splendid trilogy about the Cālukyas of Gujarāta: Pāṭanaṁ Prabhutā, The Greatness of Pāṭana, (1916), Gujarātiano Nātha, The Lord of Gujarāta, (1918-19) and Rajadhirāja, The King of Kings, (1922-23); the beautiful gem, Prthvivallabha (1920-21); and the first of another series dealing with the Imperial Mauryas, Bhagvān Kauṭilya (1924-25).

3. Purāṇic dramas based on ancient historical tradition of India: Purandaraparājaya, The Conquest of Indra (1922), Avibhaktātma, The Soul Undivided, (1923), Tarpana, The Obsequial Offering (1934), and Putrasamovādi, Like Unto a Son, (1929). Dhruvaswāminidevī (1928), though not strictly Puranic, may also be considered in this group. Lopāmudrā (1933) is sub-divided into one novel, Viśvaratha and three plays, Śambarakanyā, Devedidheli, and Viśvāmitrarshi, dealing with the life of the R̥gvedic Viśvāmitra and the first authentic incident of Indian history, the war between the Āryan king Divodāsa and the Dasyu king Śambara,

4. Social dramas: Vavashethiun Svātantrya, The Freedom of Vavasheth (1915), Be Kharāba Jāna, Two Bad People (1924), Ajnānkita, The Obedient (1927), and Kakanī Shashi The Uncle's Shashi, 1928, Brahmacaryāśrama, The Hermitage of Continence, (1931).

5. Short stories collected in a volume entitled Māri Kamla ane Biji Vato.

6. Kellāka Lekho, Some Writings, Vols. I and II, 1925-26, which contain essays and notes, addresses and character sketches; Thodānka Rasadarśano; Some Interpretations of Beauty (1933), being a study of literary art and bhakti with special reference to Gujarātī literature; Ādivacano (1933) being the annual inaugural addresses of the author as the president of the Sāhitya Samsad from 1923-1929.

7. The prose-poem Śiśu ane Sakhi, The Child and His Comrade (1932).

8. Narsaiyo-Bhakta Harino (1933) a life of the poet, Narsinha Mehtā, with a critical introduction dealing with his works and age. A similar biography is Narmad, Arvācinomān Adya, The First Among Moderns. Adadhe Raste, Half Way, an autobiography is published in part.

II

Since his college days, Munshi has revelled in European literature. Dumas, Hugo and Scott, Goethe and Shelley, and the moderns with Bernard Shaw at their head, have been his literary godfathers. His true strength has lain in deriving power and vigour from his reading, in fusing his materials with creative imagination and producing works of lasting worth. Munshi has always acknowledged his indebtedness to his favourite masters.

The principle features which I brought to Gujarātī fiction were an interesting story, dramatic situation and dialogue, and living characters. I have remained first and foremost a story-teller, not a moralist. In the beginning, I had as my model the art of the greatest story-teller in world's literature, Alexander Dumas. Further, I have painted neither 'good boys,' beloved of schoolmasters, nor pale abstractions, but full-blooded men and women who love and fight and sin and struggle as in actual life. My principal concern was the real drama of life, neither theories of life nor morals.

I have found it impossible to look upon a historical novel as anything but a romantic view of life. A bygone age, as it actually was, can never be drawn by a literary artist. He can either treat the past as an alien world and its men but myths, and occupy himself with hauling its upholstery into the present; or he can project the drama of life around him on the screen of the past. As I have understood it, the art of Kālidāsa, Shakespeare, of Scott, Hugo and Dumas is of the latter variety. And with my limited powers, I have always endeavoured to keep the ideal of this art before me, and to bring the romance into close correspondence with life. Romanticism, I felt, was too much in the clouds.¹

Again he adds :

The dominant theme of most of my works is love, not as a thing to be talked of with a hushed voice or stifled by conventional situation or poetic phrases, but love as he bestrides the modern world, leaving footprints in tears and in blood in defiance of moral preceptors or sanctimonious humbugs and cold-blooded prudes. I have tried to view this emotion through its weakness and strength, its anguish, turmoil and tragedy, its sublime surrender and no less glorious joy. I have done it in the belief that in its frank delineation alone lies its poetry and its glory, and its only chance of escape from sordidness and vulgarity. In pursuing this idea, I have been guilty of offending against the literary conventions of Gujarāta. But life, in its reality, is sacred to me; not so much the laws made to bind it.²

III

The very first work of Munshi, Verani Vasulata, is one of his best, because it strikes the keynote of all his later writings. The vision of India, great in the future as she was in the past, nay even greater, is always before the author's mind. The story begins with the struggles of a young man, Jagat, against dire poverty. Raghubhai, an official of the small state of Ratnagadh, takes the fatherless boy and his mother under his protection. Jagat becomes strongly attached to a neighbour's little daughter, Tanman. His mother's attraction proves too much for Raghubhai and, with her son, she has to take refuge in the house of her husband's elder brother at Surat to escape dishonour.

Years pass, and Jagat, now a college student, meets his Tanman again, now in the spring-flush of youth and beauty at Dumas, near Surat. The vacation, a dream of happiness, passes away all too soon. The lovers part with tears, and as they kiss, are observed by the step-mother of Tanman. She is indignant; caste rules forbid her marrying Jagat; Tanman is sacrificed at the altar of caste and married to a rake. On the other hand Jagat returns home

1. Aitihāsika Pātro ane Tenuni Nirupana (Guj.)

2. Adalhe Rashie. (Guj.) Unpublished.

to Surat to find the wicked Raghubhai poisoning with his presence the dying moments of his saintly mother. He takes a vow to avenge himself on Raghubhai.

On his return to Bombay, he learns of Tanman's forcible marriage, and, later, of her death. With his heart full of hatred towards society, Jagat goes to Sādhū Ramkisanadasji at Ratnagadh to find peace in his old haunts. Unable to do so, he resolves to kill himself, but is saved by Swāmi Anantanand who forbids him to take the life God has given him.

This Anantanand's ambition in life is to leaven modern life with the ancient ideals of India, and he is training a band of assistants to help him build up a young and vigorous nation. His centre of work is Ratnagadh. Jagat becomes his disciple, and is soon the foremost among all his followers. For the work of Anantanand, Jagat comes to Bombay, where Raghubhai has been trying to destroy Anantanand's schemes. Jagat gets the chance of repaying his old debt, and rendering service to his cause at the same time. Raghubhai's daughter, Ramā, falls in love with him; and Raghubhai, not knowing the real position of Jagat, also tries to win such an eligible son-in-law. Poor, loving Ramā suffers from both sides; from her father, who has no regard for her, and from Jagat who hopes to injure the father by playing with the daughter's affections.

Between Raghubhai and Anantananda matters rapidly come to a head. Raghubhai employs Tanman's uncle to steal some important documents from Anantananda's safe. The attempted robbery by Tanman's uncle is frustrated by Jagat. Carried away by his personal wrong, he allows the thief to be murdered by his discarded mistress, Tanman's step-mother, and lets her escape. An inquiry into a murder in Anantanand's own residence would be most unfortunate for the Mandal; so Anantananda burns all the compromising documents, and when the police come in calmy takes upon himself the full responsibility for the murder. He tells Jagat in his prison-cell: "Thy perfection has to be paid for, and the price for it is my life." Then only Jagat sees the true meaning of the saying that vengeance belongs to God alone. The swāmi passes away in prison by prāṇāyāma before the death sentence can be carried out.

Jagat learns the true value of the price paid by his guru to buy his 'perfection', and decides to be worthy of the price paid. He deliberately sets out to woo and win Ramā, the daughter of his arch-enemy, who has been pining for him and leads her with him to Ratnagadh as his mate and comrade in the great work of nation-building.

It is clearly a first attempt. There are many faults in the structure of the plot, in the denouement, in the style and in the language of this work. But Jagat is very true to life; Raghubhai, the villain of the piece, is a forceful character. Anantananda—the Ideal—is in the background more or less as becomes the Inspirer and Teacher. Among the woman characters, there are only two who might be considered here—Tanman and Ramā. They are in strong contrast to each other. The former is forceful and assertive, magnificent in her rebellion and even in her defeat. Ramā is the typical gentle Hindu maiden, her life being inspired only by love and self-surrender.

Kono Vanka? mercilessly exposes the trickeries of the self-styled religious teachers in Hindu society. The story centres round Mani, a child-widow, who has been betrayed by a so-called 'respectable man,' and who, to hide her shame and save her child, escapes to a small village. Ultimately, pursued by shocked respectability and obliging vice, she seeks refuge with a student Muchakunda, a gentleman in every sense. But some busy-bodies write to Muchakunda's father, and the old man, bigoted and orthodox though good-hearted, arrives, and to save his son, forces him to marry his betrothed, the ugly, one-eyed Kashi. Jealousy, poverty and Mani's beauty complicate an unfortunate situation. Muchakunda falls ill; Mani, defying conventions, nurses him. The patience of the poor woman is angelic and her unceasing devotion to Muchakunda—even to the extent of remaining with him while her own child is drawing her last breath—is superb. After a time Kashi dies, and the lovers are united in wedlock.

It has been successfully rendered on the cinema film, but as a novel it is certainly weak. The work is characterised by a complete absence of humour. Mani is too sad and Muchakunda too serious to have developed this precious virtue.

Svapnadṛṣṭā resounds with the echoes of the Surat sessions of the Indian National Congress made famous by the 'Marathā shoe' flung at Sir Pherozeshaw Mehta. It was the time when the revolutionary movement first started in Bengal. Naturally it fired the youthful enthusiasm of young men and women all over the land.

The story turns round a group of friends in the Baroda College who have formed a secret society to organise a revolution. They all attend the Surat Congress and help to break it up. There are fine miniature pen-pictures of the great Indian leaders of the period like Sir Pherozeshaw, Tilak, Gokhale, Aravinda Ghose, Lajpat Rai and Bepin Pal; most of them have passed away, but readers who have had the privilege of knowing them will undoubtedly acknowledge that Munshi has given us true portraits. This work is a realistic picture of the lives of thousands of young students in India who begin as idealists and end by settling down to the humdrum ways of their fathers. The ideals of Anantananda in impatient and immature hands turn to grotesque mock-heroic dreams of the mentally unbalanced.

Snehasambhrama shows Munshi in a rollicking, boisterous mood. An extremely impressionable professor is very fond of many fair admirers, among others the wife of a Samshere Bahadur. This leads to unexpected developments. The wife of the professor has her objections to her husband's ways. The whole tangled skein is unravelled one night at a lonely house to which the whole party is induced to attend by a practical joke played by a friend. The final scene is full of bright sparkling comedy. Shamshere Bahadur's wife lets down her lover. At the end the disillusioned professor confesses to his wife and his beloved pupil, Mohini: "I have been an ass. Please forgive me!" In reply an old friend coolly offers him his snuff-box, saying "Never mind, dear boy, just take a pinch. It will clear your head".

Pure humour is found in every page of this delightful book. The characterisation is true to life. The innocent professor, his wife, loving but uncouth in the extreme, the bold girl Mohini, the genial old uncle and the good old aunt Jaskore, and above all the braggart, Shamshere Bahadur, are all characters which will live.

IV

The historical romances of Munshi are the best known of his works, though over the first of the famous trilogy—Paṭaṇanī Prabhuṭā—there was a storm of protest from the Jaina community. These three deal with the most glorious period of Hindu Gujarāta—the reign of Siddharāja Jayasinha. Through all the three we can clearly trace the growth of Munshi as a novelist. He goes from strength to strength, and in the third, Rajadhirāja, we clearly recognise the masterhand.

Paṭaṇanī Prabhuṭā still shows signs of the prentice hand. But the defects are few while the beauties are many.

The story revolves round the efforts of the minister Muñjāla to consolidate the kingdom of Pāṭaṇa during the minority of King Jayasinha Cālukya. She has come from her far-off home in the south attracted by the personality of Muñjāla rather than by the greatness of the king of Gujarāta. In the beginning of her infant son's reign she desires to assume supreme control and to shake off Muñjāla. But Pāṭaṇa will not accept this. The people force her to see reason and to have their trusted and well-beloved Mūñjāla restored. Mīṇaḷa yields with perfect grace, and in yielding wins a very real victory.

The second part of this trilogy, Gujarātano Nātha, carries the story forward. The power of the minister, Muñjāla, is now at its height, and we more than suspect that the real lord of Gujarāta, Gujarātano Nātha, is he rather than Jayasinha. Mīṇaḷadevī is there, mature and wiser. She can now love Muñjāla with all her heart, and yet they both can keep their passion under complete control and combine for the good of their youthful King and country. But the main interest of the book centres round the Brāhmaṇa, Kāka, the warrior 'without fear and without reproach'. Kāka is unlearned in Saṁskṛta lore; and though he has saved the accomplished daughter of a paṇḍita, Mañjarī, from a cruel fate, she despises him. She wants her lover to come to her, not 'like a dog to his mate' but, like a Paraśu Rāma 'irresistible as fire, unconquerable as Kailāsa itself'. She turns in disdain from this wandering trooper from the land Lāṭa. The winning of this proud woman's heart is the central episode of this book.

Meanwhile King Jayasinha is attracted by a beautiful Rajput maiden—Rāṇaka—and wishes to send her a love message through Kāka. But Rāṇaka is carried off from under the very nose of Jayasinha by Kheṅgāra, the youngest son of Rā Navaghana of Junāgaḍha. Kāka and Kheṅgāra are great friends, and the former actually helps the latter against his own master, and incidentally wins the esteem of Mañjarī.

But the seed of bitter enmity is sown between Jayasinha and Kheṅgāra and this is described in the third book Rājadhiraṇya. The war between Pāṭaṇa and Junāgaḍha goes on for years, but Junāgaḍha seems impregnable. Kāka is called from Bhṛgukaccha (Broach), where he is the military governor, to help at the siege of Junāgaḍha. His departure is a signal for the revolt of the old patriots of Lāṭa to regain their independence from the sway of Pāṭaṇa. Mañjarī proves herself to be the worthy comrade of the great warrior, Kāka. She maintains a firm hand over the defences of the citadel against the rebels.

Muñjāla has extended his protection over Kāka. But King Jayasinha cannot forget the help he had given to Kheṅgāra while carrying away Rāṇakadevī. News of the revolt in Broach reaches Jayasinha, but he deliberately prevents its reaching the ears of Kāka and does not send immediate help to Mañjarī. The siege of Junāgaḍha ends in the storming of the great fort, when Rā Kheṅgāra meets a glorious death. Jayadeva, exulting in the fact that Rāṇaka has at last been won, carries her off with him to Wadhwan. But Kāka is pledged to the loving memory of his dear friend Kheṅgāra, and prevents his king from fulfilling his intentions towards Rāṇakadevī. When arguments are of no avail, he forcibly imprisons his king in an underground cellar. The opportune arrival of Minaḷadevī and Jayasinha's queen makes Kāka's work easy. Raṇakadevī, Khengāra's noble spouse, immolates herself on the funeral pyre of her dead lord on the banks of the Bhogāvā. The spot can be seen even now, and attracts numerous pilgrims.

To resume the thread of the story, Kāka is ultimately told of the critical situation of Mañjarī in the Broach Fort, and he rushes to her rescue. He arrives too late to save the heroic Mañjarī, who dies in the fort of starvation, and he nearly goes out of mind with rage and grief. He saves the fort, and the book closes with the triumphal procession of Jayasinhadeva as the overlord, Rājādhirāja, of Gujarāta through the streets of Bhrgukaccha supported by Muñjāla, Kāka and other great ministers.

This trilogy has given to Gujarāti literature a splendid galaxy of great figures. Warriors and statesmen, chieftains and noble ladies pass by in gorgeous procession. Through all the three works, Muñjāla stands out as the grandest figure. He stands, solitary like some lone peak. His eye is everywhere, his hand is ready to intervene at every crisis. Indeed he is the very spirit of Gujarāta incarnate in human form. Nothing ruffles him. No sacrifice is too great for him if his land demands it, for has he not given up his own sister, his wife, and son so as to be able to serve his land the better? He looks cold-hearted and calculating, but his heart is warm and true. He never forgets true and loyal service. He has mastered his passions and in this mastery he stands above all others. For Minaḷadevī, his love is true as steel but pure as an adoring worshipper's for his goddess. Muñjāla is a great psychological study of human character.

Munshi's true strength lies in his understanding of woman's mind in all its varied aspects. Minaḷadevī, in the first work, is almost repellant through her stiff-necked pride. Experience mellows her, and she changes into the stately mother of her people. She can even be generous to Rāṇaka who has preferred the Rā of Junāgaḍha to her own son. She it is who brings Jayasinha to his senses, and honours Rāṇaka, the wife of her fallen enemy as the Sati.

Mañjarī is a different type of woman altogether. She is a highly intellectual person deeply versed in the intricacies of Samskr̥ta learning. Her ideals have been nourished on the glorious myth of the great Brāhmaṇa warrior, Paraśu Rāma, and she proudly refuses to look at the puny men of her days. When Kāka first comes to her notice, she has nothing but contempt for this vagabond trooper who knows no word of Samskr̥t. Kāka sets about to win her. And when he performs valorous deeds, she flings her pride away, and gives herself to him body and soul. Mañjarī is one woman in a thousand. Her tragic death at the end of the third volume leaves the reader with tears in his eyes. Mañjarī has been the most brilliant and the most popular heroine in modern Gujarātī fiction.

Her lover, Kāka, can be best described as an overgrown boy in his love for adventure and fighting. But he has a diplomat's wisdom. Jayasinha resents it and is afraid of him. Though a loyal enough subject, he is the soul of honour and has the courage to face the king when he is in the wrong. Kāka is a figure to love. He will be to the boys of Gujarāta what Richard the Lion-hearted is to England's youth.

Thus history is made to live in a way as had never before been done in Gujarātī. These three great works indeed are assured of a lasting place in the literature.

Prthivīvallabha is another historical novel dealing with the romantic figure of Muñja of Dhārā, the great lover of art and learning, and based on Munjarāsa in Prabandhacintāmaṇi.¹ The language is much more Samskr̥tised than in the earlier novels. This work has been rendered into Hindi and Marāṭhī, and staged, screened and recently acquired for a talkie. Considered as a work of art it is an exquisite cameo, and is the best of the author's romances.

When Tailapa decides to put Muñja to death and at the same time to publicly humiliate his sister Mṛṇālavatī, the captive is forced to beg at every door of the city for seven days, and men, women and children fall in love with the royal beggar. The last scene may be described in the author's words:

1. Plot, vide p. 57

Without hesitation, uninvited, he came up straight to the place where Mr̥ṇāla stood, and smiled. His smile was as fascinating as ever.

"How are you, Mr̥ṇālavatī?" The longing of a lover, meeting his beloved after ages, was in his voice. Mr̥ṇāla could not smile in reply all at once, but the magic of his smile and voice was upon her. She smiled, sweetly, slowly, with a face overshadowed with grief. Her eyes brimmed over with tears. Their glances met as if in an embrace. "What can you give me now?" Pr̥thivallabha asked with the tenderness of a fond lover. "You have given me all that you ever had."

These words had a maddening effect on Mr̥ṇālavatī. A wild gale of passion swept over her. She became oblivious of her plight, the occasion, the place, and looked at her lover with eyes full of love.

"Fair one!" said he, "do not be afraid. The world is both wicked and stupid, and will always remain so. You have brought beauty into your life. Now let the world say what it likes."

Mr̥ṇāla forgot herself, Tailapa, the spectators, even her sense of modesty. She threw away the pot in which she held the alms and fell at the fettered feet of Muñja. "Forgive me, my lord, Pr̥thivallabha, I am your murderer." Mr̥ṇāla took the dust from off Muñja's feet and placed it on her head.

"You? My death was pre-determined at the very moment of my birth. What can you do?"

Tailapa sprang down from the platform on which he stood and dragged Mr̥ṇāla away. The citizens and the soldiers stood with tears in their eyes...

"Whose has been the triumph, mine or yours?" Muñja asked Tailapa.

"This elephant of mine will just decide who has triumphed." said Tailapa. And leaving Mr̥ṇāla on the platform, he came forward.

Muñja laughed aloud. "Will it be your triumph? You wanted to bend me to your will, but I will die, unyielding as ever. You prided yourself on your morals; and you will have committed the heinous sin of killing a king. Who is the conqueror, you or I?" Muñja's resounding voice, full of contempt, was heard by the whole crowd.

In excitement Tailapa bit his lips. His eyes flashed with venom. "Soldiers, take him there."

"Why?" asked Muñja, "I am going there myself." Saying so, he stepped towards the elephant with lordly dignity. All eyes were fixed on him. Every one held his breath.

Muñja coolly walked in front; Tailapa and a few soldiers followed. He came and stood near the elephant for a while. Under Tailapa's orders, his fetters were removed.

Unfettered, Muñja stood erect. He removed the locks which overhung his forehead; and turned his majestic face towards the people and Mr̥ṇāla. His eyes were fearless, flashing irresistible power. A smile full of sweetness and dignity played upon his lips. The people shuddered. Some men and women began to sob. Mṛṇāla looked on as one out of her senses. The soldiers with faces set hard went on mechanically performing their duty.....

Muñja looked with contempt at Tailapa and stepped near the trunk of the elephant. There he stopped, as if in hesitation. Tailapa got the moment he waited for. "Are you frightened?"

"The earth will crash to its doom when its lover begins to fear. Fool! I was only thinking—"

"Of what?"

"Only this," Muñja replied, looking up with pride. And his eyes were full of longing. "I was only thinking what will happen to poor Sarasvatī. Laxmī will now go to Vishnu. Victory will repair to Kārtikeya. But when Muñja will go, Sarasvatī alone will be disconsolate." Saying this, he turned his back on Tailapa with inexpressible contempt, and addressed the elephant thus, "First among elephant! Pṛthivīvallabha, the first among kings, has now come to you!"

The elephant stood as if in deep thought, then playfully waved its trunk, Muñja softly rubbing it all the time. Ultimately, with perfect composure, he clung to the trunk; the driver pricked it with the goad; and the elephant twining its trunk round Muñja lifted him off the ground.

The elephant lifted its trunk, lowered it again and again. The people with tears in their eyes saw in its embrace Pṛthivīvallabha, smiling, his brilliant eyes flashing with pride, like Śrī Kṛṣṇa triumphantly standing in the coils of the serpent Kālī.

The elephant snorted and gave one swift swing to his trunk. And Muñja's triumphant cry resounded in the air, "Victory to Mahā Kālā."

The crowd stood horror-struck. Mṛṇālavatī's piteous shrieks rang out, piercing the heavens.

Muñja for a moment disappeared under the foot of the elephant. The animal put its foot on him—pressed it—a crack was heard—the foot was lifted.

On the ground, the corpse of Pṛthivīvallabha lay crushed and flattened.

Bhagavān Kauṭilya is the first of a series yet to come. The terrible system of espionage under the last Nandas has been brought out with startling realism. Kauṭilya is well drawn, and the great Rshis of the Naimisha forest and their life are depicted with Munshi's art.

V

In 1922, Munshi first turned to the drama as an outlet for his creative imagination. The first, Purāṇḍara-parāṇjaya, was woven round the Purāṇic episode of Sukanyā and Cyavana. In the next, Avibhaktatma, he strives to portray the ideal of love. True lovers are halves of one another—one soul in two bodies. And as a type, he took the finest pair in ancient Indian tradition, Vasishṭha and Arundhatī. In Tarpaṇa, an unrelieved tragedy, we have the myth of Aurva who destroyed the Non-Āryan Haihayas and re-established Āryan supremacy in India under King Sagara. Sagara is the pupil of Aurva but loves the daughter of the Haihaya king. Aurva forces him to sacrifice his love to save his land.

In these dramas, Munshi has tried to bring these semi-divine figures down upon earth, endowing them with human feelings, but his attempt has met with doubtful success. Divine honour paid to these great heroes for ages has removed from them all traces of human weakness, and their reappearance with human attributes only makes the situation melodramatic rather than realistic. In Putrasamovādī, where we have the well-known episode of Śukrācārya and Devayāni, the characters are much better delineated and the situations are better handled.

Dhruvaswāmīnīdevī deals with a well known chapter of Ancient Indian History. Here we move about amongst living men and women. The plot has been suggested by the recently discovered fragments of a Samskr̥ta play called Devicandraguptam by Viśākhadatta, the author of Mudrārākshasa. The majestic Dhruvaswāmīnī with her noble steadfastness and loyalty is a powerfully drawn character. Candragupta, the Vikramāditya of history, stands out in admirable contrast with the ignoble Rāmagupta.

The social dramas are all racy and sparkling productions. As Munshi himself says about one of them, 'they are not to be read by those who are in love with respectability.' They are thoroughly modern in spirit and can be relied upon to shock those who possess the old Indian mentality. They are popular with the younger generation and are frequently staged by amateurs. They all are directed against the hypocrisy which covers life, against foibles, great and small. They describe every day realities; and the lesson is conveyed through rollicking comedy and hearty laughter. The plots are woven with skill and situation, comic and absurd, develop in rapid succession.

Vavashethnūn Svātantrya is the story of a poor hen-pecked husband, inspired by the example of Belgium defying Germany, to make a bid for independence. In Be Kharāba Jana, Rambhā the daughter of a rich lawyer prefers a penniless young medico to the rich prig, Ramdas Dagliwala, whom her parents have chosen for her. She leads her people a rare dance all over Bombay. It makes delightful reading and has been a favourite play for amateur theatricals in schools and colleges. Ajnankita is a cruel picture of situations unfortunately too common in lower middle class life and makes painful reading. The story turns on how the daughter of a poor widowed mother is sold 'in marriage' to a decrepit and vicious old money-bag. The unfortunate heroine, driven by circumstances to prostitution, at last finds refuge and peace with the clerk of the old man, who humbly places at her disposal all he has, "two bighas of land, a pair of bullocks and a cow". Kakmi Shashi revolves round a modern Bombay girl, a thorough-going suffragate, who tries to be independent of men and ends by accepting her guardian as her husband. It is a successful social comedy and has also been a favourite of the amateurs.

Brahmacaryāśrama was written in Yeravda Jail and the first Act is laid in prison. The dramatis personae are political prisoners. Being forced by circumstances to live separate from their womenfolk, they talk of the divine virtue of continence, Brahmacarya. When they come out, pursuant to their vow, they found an institution where they can practice this great virtue. But their cook is old and feeble, and once, sends his niece, Pemli, to do his work in the kitchen. Then begins a race between these sworn brahmachāris to attract the attention of the girl. Bad feelings are aroused. The whole situation reaches the climax when after trying to oust one another, all leave, except Dr. Madhubhai, the eminent medical man who originated this idea and founded the āśrama. He weeps amidst the ruins of his noble scheme, whereby mankind was to have been made immortal. Pemli sympathises with him and they weep in each others arms. Suddenly, the elderly Doctor opens his eyes, and a new light shines in them as he sees Pemli clinging to him. He sings his favourite line 'The path of God is for the brave,' and Pemli joyfully joins.

With his fine grasp of the technique of plot-weaving and his keen sense of humour, if Munshi tried his hand at short stories, he would certainly succeed. But only one small volume of short stories has appeared from his pen so far, Mari Kamala ane Biji Vato.

VI

Munshi, like every great writer has his own theory of life and literature. His Kellala Lekho, Ādivacano, Narsaiyo-Bhakta Harino and Thodank Rasadarśano form a valuable compendium of literary, historical and biographical studies. His essay on Gujarātana Jyotirdharo and the address on Gujarāta-Eka Samskārika Vyakti are, of all his miscellaneous writings, the most inspiring. His address Jivanano Ullāsa, Joy of Life, and Prāṇalikāvada, Conventionalism, brilliantly articulate the author's revolt against the prevailing conventions in literature. Mānavatānā Ārshadarśano, Vision of Human Greatness, contains an attempt to present a theory of life.

Narsaiyo is a biography of Narsinha Mehtā in which the poet is dramatically and psychologically recreated from his own works. It also contains, in an introductory essay, the result of Munshi's investigations into the difficult questions of the poet's age and the authenticity of some of his works.

Munshi's theory of art and literature may be shortly stated in his own words:

The classical, that is, the literature which is truly effective and beautiful is the only real literature. A few can understand its underlying mystery. The cultured taste of only a few can enjoy it.

A literary artist is entitled to complete freedom in the choice of subject and treatment; conventions, and, in particular, those imposed by religion and morals destroy its soul. The sole test of literary effort is the success with which it reveals beauty. This beauty is the indefinable quality which makes creative art a source of undying joy, and is intrinsically different from moral good.

And literary criticism can only be subjective and creative; that is, it can only be a creative effort at interpreting beauty of art as it strikes the critic's imagination.

Artistic beauty, according to Munshi, must satisfy the innate craving of the cultured for idealistic perfection.

The author's theory of life is thus expressed:

The secret of Āryan greatness lies in thus converting one's self into a characteristic force...When man loses himself in the one idea round which his individuality revolves, he becomes refulgent, powerful.....He becomes an elemental force. He attains irresistible grandeur.....

Similarly when the unity which the imagination of two lovers calls into existence is visualised by them as a single, undivided, changeless soul between them, the goal is reached. Love rules their life as Beauty. ... Thus the secret of all beauty and greatness is not in remaining what I am, but in realising something beyond it; not in 'Being' but in 'Becoming'—Bhāvanā. For in the process of 'Becoming' only, do I realise enduring joy. In studying the fundamentals of love and religious devotion, of literary beauty and human greatness, of sacrifice and duty, I have found but one underlying principle: Beauty in life as in literature lies only in attempts to achieve 'Becoming' of evergrowing magnitude.¹

This 'Becoming' is not necessarily spiritual or moral. He says, again :

A dangerous life is far nobler than one of passive insipidity. Greatness, for men or nations lies in greater and yet greater efforts to live as an idea through struggle and suffering, through tapas and tyāga. In normal human instincts and motives, intensified by an ideal and purified by readiness to suffer for it, lies the secret of strength and power. In a full and perfect life, strength and ambition have a place; and so have laughter and tears and pride, and even the pleasures of sense. Love is supreme law; and so is Beauty. Both attain perfection, one in inseverable Unity of man and woman, the other in endless joy². . . .

VII

The consideration of Śiśu ane Sakhī, The Child and His Comrade, has been kept to the very last, because it depicts, to the writer's mind, the very heart of the author. As can be seen from the preface to the book, the piece welled forth from his inmost being quite spontaneously in an increasing stream of rhythmic prose of beauty and power. It must have been a most wonderful experience. It is a sustained vision, where, scene by scene, the unfolding life of the man is revealed. We can visualise—we who have known them in flesh—the various persons mentioned, though no names are given.

Śiśu, the Child, has dreamt of a comrade, Sakhī, who would share his life with him. But it remains only a dream; for he is married when he is too young to understand what it all means. His wife is a gentle, uncomplaining girl—Sati—whose whole life is bound up with her husband, but unfortunately she is too ignorant to enter into or even to appreciate Śiśu's yearnings after beauty and joy and power.

1. Thoṭāṅka Rasadarśano, p. 13.

2. Adadhe Rasṭe (Unpublished).

At first, Sati is quite happy ; she has her beloved Śīsu and the love of all her family. But Śīsu's soul is in revolt. He cannot bear Sati near him, for she is not the comrade he had dreamt of. Still, always mindful of his duty, he is considerate to Sati. The influence of a good mother and a cultured upbringing saves Śīsu from temptations. Then Sakhi comes into his life, and Śīsu at once recognises in her the loved comrade of his dreams. They both recognise with rapture that each is but a part of one whole, and that they have been travelling through a succession of births in vain search for each other. Their separation is not yet ended, for both are separately tied down by the 'sacred ties' of family and home. But they are both poets, and in literary collaboration they find the joy which life denies them.

Sati, with the true intuition of love, at once sees this mutual attraction. She cannot possibly give to Śīsu the inspiration and joy of artistic and intellectual camaraderie which Sakhi alone can give him. And gentle and loving as she is, she does not grudge Śīsu the happiness she herself cannot give. The position is impossible, but each is willing to suffer that the other two may be happy. Of the three, Śīsu is most impatient and the most suffering. All the three are the best of friends. Next comes word-pictures of a wonderful trip to Europe made by all three together. They see the beauties natural and artistic of the West and find inspiration in the great ideals of Greece and Rome as embodied in their works of art. On their return, life becomes a living torture. Śīsu borne down by physical and mental worry wants to give up the world.

After many days Śīsu and Sakhi met alone. The waves of the slow-heaving sea broke on the shore ; and so did their hearts' emotions, one on top of the other. The atmosphere was tense with feeling. Lost hopes were revived. Their hearts began to dance. They sat on a rock which stood in the waters behind the old broken temple.

The sky was clear ; the hills beyond, dark. The full moon rose, illumining the earth, and shed glistening drops of light on the quiet waters. Beauty was everywhere. And both sat wrapt in love.

Śīsu was serious. "Sakhi ! This is the day on which we pledged ourselves to each other, years ago, on the banks of the White River. We have, no doubt, kept the pledge so far. But then we did not know Love fully. We thought him the image of dancing joy, tender of heart. But now we know him for what he is: grave and gloomy, looking at us with tearful eyes; tortured by separation; treading with slow steps; singing the song of woe in a voice quivering with anguish."

"Śisu! Why do you talk thus?" quoth Sakhi. "He is our only hope". Śisu shook his head. "Sakhi." The cruel one has grown flowers of hope that he may scorch them with despair...Death has missed none so far and will not miss us. Sakhi! Then why should I not live as dead even in the midst of life, and attain what death alone can lead me to?

"Sakhi! I have found a beautiful spot, far, far away from the world. There, the sleepy Rewā creeps between lofty crags; the hooded cobras swing to the music of wandering sādhus; the alligators, openmouthed, lovingly gaze on the rustic charms of village beauties as they come to fetch water. There, the evening breeze brings the distant tinkle of temple-bells, echoing joyfully in men's hearts. There, I will go and live in the company of the peaceful. There, chanting the hymn of love, I will seek liberation, your name on my lips."

Sakhi looked at her lover bent on renunciation, the very picture of their soul, one and indivisible. "Then fill your bowl with water for two, my Śisu! Who else will spread the deer skin for you, ascetic mine, except your impatient disciple? Śisu! When you give up the world, you will be mine." And the guardian god of lovers, as he shone in the sky, smiled sweetly and yet shrewdly.

But Satī, gentle and uncomplaining, passes away, loving to the last. Years pass, Sakhi becomes a widow, and the way to their union is clear. They unite at last, the misery of aeons is over, the two halves meet together to become one whole. Life, now, is an endless round of happiness and ease.

But once they repair to a temple in ruins on the sea shore. A venerable phantom sage appears before them and claims them as his own. He lays bare to them the true significance of their life as they live it, a life of mere worldly pleasures, fame and what people call 'good deeds.' He tells them of the glory of sacrifice; of true success to be measured not by what one acquires but by what one gives up. He lays bare the hollowness of modern life. True life, the phantom sage says, is Truth, Tapas, and Rta. This is the call of the Great Spirit of Āryāvarta (the Bhāratabhāgyavidhātā of Ravi Thakur) and the two companions on the Road of Life obey it.

Thus ends this extraordinary work. If one can so call it, it is a stirring song in prose, full of passion, and beauty throbbing with love and tears and sacrifice.

Munshi, as a prose writer, is among those of the first rank in the language; to the minds of some he has no equal among the modern writers of Gujarāṭī prose. His creative art has brought life and beauty to Gujarāṭī fiction and drama; and the philosophy of life preached by him through his works has given to Gujarātā both joy and strength.

CHAPTER VI.

MODERN TENDENCIES PART II

(1914 to 1934)

Gaurishankar Govardhanram Joshi—His art—Short stories—Bhaiyā Dātā—Rajputānī—Women Authors—Smt. Jyotsnā Shukla.—Smt. Lilavati Munshi—Psychological point of view of the modern woman—Shūhijavā-nū Jala—Vanmāllānī Diary—Pāṇca Pāṇi—Raktācitra—Batubhai Umarwadla—Ramanlal Vasantlal Desai—Realism and Humour—Ramanarayan Vishwanath Pathak—Svaira-Vihāra—Dvirefā-nī Vato—Khemī—Dhansukhlal Krishnalal Mehta—Jyotindra Dave—Folklore of Kaṭhīāvāḍa—Zaverchand Meghani—Saurāshtra-nī Rasa-dhāra—Sohini-nēhār—History—Literary History—Poetry—Research—Biography—Stage—Journalism—Monthlies—Weeklies—Dailies—Conclusion.

I

Gaurishankar Govardhanram Joshi, known as Dhūmaketu, The Comet, (Born 1892) has written numerous short stories, many of which are now collected in Tanakhā Sparks, I (1928), II (1928) and III (1932); Avāśeśha (1932); Padachāyā, Shadows, (1931) and two novels, Raja-Mugata, The Crown, (1924), and Prithvī (1925). He has also written plays for children, several essays, and a volume of reflections.

Dhūmaketu is an author of outstanding merit and great promise. His works have in a large measure the elements which go to make up the romantic spirit. They disclose love of mystery; response to beauty wherever found; intellectual curiosity; and imagination and feeling which transfigure the reality of life into romance. The tendencies associated with these elements are reflected in his style, technique and outlook, as also in the literary form through which he generally expresses himself. His style is rich in expression and idioms of varied origin, and is distinguished by literary elegance. He aims neither at power nor effect, but at charm.

He seeks atmosphere not only in the usual haunts of the cultured and the rich, but in slums and villages, from the illiterate and the lowly. For his materials, he freely draws upon not only the folklore of the province but upon every clime and age walk of life; and, while doing so, rarely obscures the effect or lowers the standard of literary art. His travels in different parts of India give him a large sketch-book from which to portray life and nature, and by patient observation he has collected quite a museum of human and local finds. His stories are often prefaced by a graphic description of the scene in which the plot is laid.

It is this ever-widening hunt for the beautiful and the romantic which has led him to adopt the short story as a medium. His best stories fulfil all the requirements of art. They are organic literary creations, called into life by a few deft strokes on a small canvas, bringing out only one situation and dominated by a single feeling, sentiment or outlook. Sometimes his characters are drawn feebly, and lack the living touch. At places, execution is uneven or conversation falls below the standard. But he excels in preserving for the printed story the old world flavour of a story not read but narrated. The present-day public which more often than not reads a story, finds in Dhūmaketu's pages the breathless pleasure of hearing a well-told tale.

II

His tender sympathy invests the poor, the lowly and the innocent with a romantic halo; often a common-place incident of village life is lit up with pathos. The author's love for the village, however, is a little aggressive. Village is heaven; city, hell. Life in the former is uniformly good and honest, happy, hospitable and noble; in the city 'owners and masters are robbers in whose shadow these clerks and tenants, hungry and miserable, dwell.' In describing rural life he is in his element. We find in his pages the shepherd and his wife aglow with the same high strung emotion and passion which is generally the privilege of the cultured and the artistic to feel. Like a true romantic author, Dhūmketu defies the shackles of realism.

III

A few of the subjects which he has successfully dealt with are: The old coachman waiting day after day for his daughter's letter which comes but a day too late; the old railway signaller who prefers to die than leave the little garden he loves so well; the Brāhmana and the ghost which wants him to perform a pilgrimage; the little, imaginative boy who pathetically yearns to hear the story which his parents are too indifferent to tell him; the cowherd and his wife who, after a momentary lapse, 'kiss again with tears'; the sādhu who loves a haunting face which turns out to be that of his disciple's wife; the student who loves a widow, whom he ultimately succeeds in finding in a prostitute's den; the Rajputa lady who fights her husband's ghost; the millionaire of Bombay who finds disillusionment while trying to play the part of the saviour of a village; the village chief and the headman whose friendship survives a deadly feud in which their sons destroy each other; the Rajputa lady who killed her husband for betraying Jhālorā to Allāuddīn Khiljī; Āmrāpallī of ancient Vaiśālī; Narcissus and Orpheus of Greek mythology; and Brahma's curse on the goddess Rati.

The pathos in Bhaiyā Dādā is extremely well brought out. Old Badrinath has served long and faithfully as a signaller at a small wayside railway station. He lives in a little box by the railway crossing and has turned the surrounding patch of land into a small garden. His family consists of a goat which gives him milk, a cat and three kittens, and the twelve-year daughter of a workman who often comes to cheer his lonely existence. But once he commits a breach of duty and a smart traffic superintendent, adoring efficiency, orders the bhaiyā's dismissal. Members of the staff who love and respect him dare not tell him of his fate, and ultimately the superintendent has to do it himself. Badrinath, at first, cannot realise that dismissal implies leaving his box, his garden, his little world. When he does, his heart breaks. With inexpressible grief, he entrusts his cat and kittens to the shirestdar. The next morning when the shirestdar pays him a visit Bhaiyā Dādā is no more: his corpse lies in the little box where he was wont to sleep.

The author's treatment of the tragic is very successful. In Māsahūra Gāvaiyā, Famous Musician, the musician Indramanī falls in love with Tara, who refuses to marry him until his music possesses a soul. The musician wanders in lonely places trying to acquire for his music 'the soul' which his beloved desires for it. But, in trying to do so, he comes to love his sārangī, the stringed instrument, more than his life. Ultimately he succeeds in extracting soulful music out of it; and Tara, pleased with her lover, marries him. But her husband's passionate love for the sārangī rouses her jealousy, and she insists upon her husband forswearing the little instrument she hates so much. The poor musician accepts the cruel mandate. Heart-broken, he plays a farewell tune on his beloved sārangī. His soul, trembling at the impending separation, pours itself out in a song full of anguish. Tara, also, sheds tears as she hears the wailing sārangī. The neighbours hear the heart-rending notes of the terrible music with trepidation. Tara can hear it no longer. She asks her lover to desist from playing. He obeys. The beloved sārangī falls from his lifeless hands....His soul flees to keep company with the dying notes of the sārangī he loved so well.

Dhūmaketu is at his best in dealing with mysterious elements in folktales. In Rājputānī, a Rājputa, while going to meet his wife, is drowned with his mare in the river Rupeṇa, then in flood. The path by which he rode to death is now deserted, for whoever goes by it meets with disaster. A cāraṇa, bard, full of adventure, decides to take the route, now overgrown with luxuriant vegetation. But when he reaches the river he sees, seated under the greenwood tree, the shades of a few Rājputs gossiping away as was their wont in life, the hookah passing merrily from hand to hand. The bard joins them; but all fade away except one, that of the Rājputa who had lost his life. The shade then longingly requests the cāraṇa to fetch his wife there; for, it says, its last mortal wish to meet her compels it to haunt the spot. The bard agrees and delivers to the wife the message of her dead lover's ghost.

The Rājputānī is furious with wrath. She has been feeling slighted because he met death in a river instead of in a battle, and angry because he had dealt out disaster to hundreds of innocent passers-by for her sake. With sword in hand, the irate woman accompanies the bard to the haunted spot; upbraids her lover's shade for wanton cruelty; and tries to cut it in two, but in vain. The shade on its phantom horse flies towards the river. The wife follows, sword in hand. "If you are a true garasiyā, stop there," she cries. The shade stands still, but when she approaches it, it vanishes. She follows it into the river and her skirt is drenched. And lo! She beholds the shade, its face in deep distress, restlessly drinking the water which streams out of her skirt. Slowly, with ceaseless thirst, it drinks, and anguish and misery, despair and quenchless thirst are writ on its face.

The Rājputāṇī can restrain herself no longer, and deeply moved, asks, "Rājputa, what is this?" The shade replies, "Now I am satisfied. Quite satisfied. Ply your sword, Rājputāṇī. I will now enjoy a second death." The Rājputāṇī can hold the sword no longer. She bends down and catches the shadowy Rājputa's hand. "I will not let you go now", she says. She flings the sword away and catches hold of both its hands, only to find bubbles. The shade is seen further away, looking out of the waters of the mid-river. She goes further into the river; the Rājputa draws her on; she goes still further and yet he is far away. The cāraṇa shouts from the bank; "Garāsieṇa, come back. The water is very deep there. He is gone. Please return." The Rājputāṇī flings back a sweet smile. "Goddess-born! Go your way. Go back to your home happily. I want to be the wife of this unhappy garāsiyā again." She steps forward and is seen no more.

III

Women have been contributing their quota, though slowly and feebly, to the literary wealth of Gujarāta. Lady Vidyāgavri Nilkantha (Born 1876), the first lady graduate in the province, is the author of several remarkable essays. She also assisted her husband, Sir Ramanbhai, in the production of Hāsyamandira.

Śrīmatī Sumati Trivedi (Died 1911.), a promising poetess, was cut off in the bloom of youth; and so was Śrīmatī Vijayalaxmi Trivedi (Died 1913), another poetess. Śrīmatī Dipakabā Desai's (Born 1882) poems, characterised by charm and simplicity, are widely appreciated. Her works are Stavanamañjarī (1923), Khanda Kāvya (1926), and Sanjivini, a play translated from Marāṭhi. Śrīmatī Hansa Mehta (Born 1897), once the editor of the weekly Hindusthāna, has written three short plays collected under the name of Trāṇa Nāṭako. She is also the author of several works intended for children. She has adopted parts of Gulliver's Travels in Golibahārānī Musafārī, and written an interesting educative book, Aruṇa nuñ Adbhuta Svapna. A little boy is taken by Garud to different lands in a dream and told the story of its past glory and present achievements.

Śrīmatī Priyamati (1893), or, to use her nom-de-plume, Jyotsna, Shukla was the editor of a monthly magazine, Cetana, and of the weekly Sudarśana. She is the author of several essays and poems not yet collected in book form. Her poems are rich in feeling and sentiment. Dilrubāne, To the Dilrubā, is one of her noteworthy poems. Her stirring patriotic songs inspired by the political situation in 1930 are felicitously composed and have justly earned great popularity in the province. She has translated two novels from Marāṭhi,—Indira and Jyāre Suryodaya Thashe. Śhrīmatīs Kanuben Dave and Chaitanyabala Majmudar, both promising authors were cut off by early death.

V

Śrīmatī Lilavati Munshi (Born 1899) jointly edited Gujarāta with me for some years, and has written numerous sketches of contemporary and historical personalities; short novels, stories and one-act plays; diaries and letters relating to her travels in India and Europe; and essays. Her works published up to 1925 are collected in a volume styled Rekhācitro ane Bija Lekho, Sketches and Other Writings. (1925). Kūmaradevī (1930) is a play in five acts. Her stories and plays after 1925 are collected in two volumes entitled Jīvanmānthī Jadelī, Found From Life, Parts I and II (1932.) Other miscellaneous writings are collected in Vadhu Rekhācitro ane Biju Badhun, More Sketches and The Rest, (1935). Jail and the distractions of political life have of late come in the way of her literary activity.

Lilavati Munshi wields a distinctive style in the language. Simple, subtle, slashing, playful or emotional as the occasion requires, her style exhibits the finished Gujarātī of the modern period. She draws upon the resources of the language with ease and assurance. She never strains after literary effect, exercising a rare restraint over her style and treatment. She knows her métier and rarely attempts what she cannot execute with skill and confidence. Though our literary work has been produced in close association, and the style and outlook of each has greatly influenced those of the other, her sure taste has escaped the vividness of colour and the glitter of rhetoric which sometimes obscure my literary art. The colours of the pictures she draws blend in delicate shades which delight the eye but never dazzle it.

In literature, she represents the psychological point of view of the modern woman. The rule in life as in literature heretofore has been to exhibit woman as a wax-work doll, attractive only by her parasitical graces. In her works, we see woman revealed as a human being; not 'standing on the threshold of life with dumb desire', but one knowing life and its weaknesses, ready to dare all that a man may hope to do; a rebel loving adventure, romance and beauty. One of her essays develops the idea that the modern world began when man recognised the independent personality of woman. In her works of fiction also a woman is recognised great only to the extent she develops her individuality as distinct from that of man, and a man to the extent only to which he helps her to do so. Her Kashmirani-Diary, written when she was twenty-one, lifts the veil from struggles which went to shape her outlook.

Why am I not satisfied? What do I hope for most? What is life? What is duty? Why should one go on fulfilling duty? . . . For whom do these birds sing their low, sweet songs? For whom is this glorious beauty of nature? . . . On the paths on which I wander, I do not find any fashionable tourist. These by-paths are only for me. I feel an urge towards some new adventure. And scarcely could there be any one like me so foolhardy as to go about alone. What will others say when they come to know of it?

In one of the letters describing her travels in Switzerland, she writes in all seriousness :

Often I prefer hell to heaven Heaven is a good place for seeing dreams. But there, absence of misery would make happiness worthless. There, it is eternal light ; so you never get an occasion to see the wonders which lie hid in darkness But hell is different. There, you must be ready to suffer pain every day ; you must be always alert for impending struggles There, day after day, your powers are sharpened ; you are always conscious of the powers you possess. There, you can live and have your being and not die a death of boredom.

VI

The great quality of the author is a note of intimacy, a touch of self-revelation, a charm as of whispered confidence which weaves round the reader an atmosphere of personal contact. She excels in the literary art-forms in prose which give the greatest scope to subjective expression like diaries, letters and thumbnail sketches. But this restricts the scope of her execution. She rarely succeeds in the pure objective treatment of men and things. The stories which are not woven round a heroine's outlook become feeble in execution. Her earlier plays are stories narrated in bright conversation, dominated only by the heroine's attitude to life. In Kumāradevī, for instance, there is only one living character, Kumāradevī ; the others are mere mouthpieces to describe her.

Few authors possess powers of observation of such extraordinary keenness and fidelity, or can dissect the motive behind human conduct with such uncanny perspicacity. In some of her stories, she tears the veil off the conduct of man towards woman with merciless realism, thus representing a stage of literary art in advance of any other author in the language.

Her delight in the beauties of nature finds expression particularly in Kashmīrī Diary and European Patro. The description of her visit to Verināga in Kashmir is a picture in words.

Thinking that he would take long, I went into a field, climbed a tree, and comfortably laid myself down on a leafy branch. The blue sky overhead, the silver clouds floating in it, the rows on rows of shining snow-peaks on one side, the mountains on the other, the green fields with their knee-deep grass below, the river flowing slowly in front and the bed which I had made for myself in the tree, all these were indelibly impressed in my mind. I began to think; and the sweet twitter of birds kept accompaniments to the music of my thoughts.

The oar, and the water it disturbed both glistened in the rays of the moon. The reflection of the light which the boat carried coiled itself deeper and deeper in the rippling water.

Beauty of sound strongly appeals to her.

A bird seated on the tree overhead sang melodiously. The foaming waterfall sang quite a new tune before me. Water gurgled past my feet. On all sides fresh, green fields inspired new strength. In those moments of joy, I felt, what more can I desire than to hear this music all by myself, or rather in company with the low-moving clouds?

Her description of the Grand Canal at Venice on a moonlight night and the natural scenery described while flying from London to Paris form rare pen-pictures in the language.

VII

Most of her plays and stories describe the trials of an insurgent woman full of life and romance. The change is only in motives and circumstances. In each case the woman has almost the same individuality; the responsibility for her misfortunes is also laid on some man who is held up to ridicule, mockery, or condemnation. In Jhāijvāna Jala, The Waters of Mirage, Kalā, the heroine, rejects a suitor with scorn, for, he woos with 'the pride of triumph in his eyes', with authority and not with a sense of equality. Kalā, at one place, expresses herself thus:

Men are cruel. When have they understood womanhood? And yet, they demand the affections of women as of right. They do not want a wife to share their ideals. They only want lifeless statues, which could be sacrificed on the altar of their whims. Men have always treated women as belonging to a lower strata. Rāmcandra taught that the duty of a king was higher than his duty as a husband. Dharmarāja proved that a gambler's word was more sacred than his wife's honour. Manu treated women as mere objects of men's lust. Law-makers laid it down that women were the property of men. Moralists saw in women mere cunning fetters. What more is left now? Woman means an obedient slave, dust for man's feet to tread on. And yet woman loves man with all her heart.

In Avasāna, Death, a lonely widow is driven to give up her intended remarriage with her lover as her little child prefers to die rather than share its mother's affections with any one. In Mālatī, the neglected wife of an elderly professor absorbed in his work, decides to stick to her helpless husband rather than go away with her lover because the two men arrange between them that the husband should renounce her in favour of the lover.

Jasodano Jivana-vikāsa, which is really a novel, describes how a village girl is wedded to a fashionable young man in Bombay; how his people, with lofty condescension, coerce her into adopting an up-to-date manner of life; how the heroine, poor Jasoda, in spite of all her efforts to satisfy the whims of her husband, is only a pawn in his game to secure the affections of a fashionable beauty; how Jasoda declines to be untrue to herself, and leaves for her village; and how the husband, rejected by the beauty, finds his mainstay finally in Jasoda. In this story the motives which inspire feminine rivalry are described with great skill and the husband of Jasoda, as usual, is meted out more than stern justice.

In Bhuddhiśālino Akhāḍo, the heroine, who prefers to marry one out of a number of admirers, is victimised by the rejected admirers, every one of whom has his motives dissected with malicious delight. In Lagane Lagane Kunvārālāla, Ready for Every Marriage Season, the callous indifference of the oft-marrying Hindu is vivisected with terrible precision.

In Vanamālānī Diary, The Story of a Tragic Fall, an educated Hindu widow has been a victim of the immoral attentions of her brother-in-law and is compelled to take service as an actress in a Bombay theatre. Vanamālā, or, to use the name she has adopted, Vasantasena, is at first shocked at the treatment given to her by her vulgar associates. The sensitive woman prays for death. Slowly an optimistic note creeps into her diary. It is a trial for her to act the love scenes. She is shy. She has the strict notions of a Hindu woman of culture. Her life so far has been a tragedy. How can she act like the wife of the principal actor, the horrid Shankar? She cries in the solitude of her room. She prays for strength. She seeks the solace of the company of Tarubala, another actress. Next day, prayers give her strength, and she plays the wife to Shankar with greater self-control. The actor takes some liberties with her, but she is now reconciled to his ways. She discovers that she loves good dresses. As the days go by, she acquires a sneaking admiration for Shankar. Shankar is so splendid and her own looks are so glorious! At last the drama is staged and Vanmala makes it a tremendous success. Her joy knows no bounds.

I shall get fame and money. I shall no longer be a beggar, an outcast from society, but a queen dominating the minds of men. Women will now try to imitate me. They will be proud to look like me. The outcaste Vanamala will do all this. No, not Vanamala. She is dead. It will be done by Vasantasena. Today, I have broken with the world in which I was born. I belong to none—no, not to anyone. I do not care for anyone. I am I; I can do what I like.

She recklessly pursues a downward course. Another play is staged; and Vasantasena is now a famous actress. She records the homage paid to her by 'rich fools': "Often such monkeys come to see and flatter me. There is scarcely any one who is attracted by my art." One night, after the play, the boy, whom once she knew as an infant and to whom her mother had pledged her years ago, walks in with profuse apologies, and enquires whether she is Vanamala whom he once knew. He has been to England for study and on his return has lost sight of his old playmate. The diary records:

For a moment my heart stood still. Memory revived numerous incidents of my childhood connected with an image so well carved in my memory. My soul, struggling to be free from this hell, was tempted for a moment. But freedom is not so easy for me. My eyes, fixed on his face, saw his manliness and honesty. But I equally read a nameless fear, a struggle eloquently writ there. In a firm voice I replied, "No, I am not Vanamala."

She gulps down a glass of wine and laughs sardonically. The last entry records:

What is the use of recording a life so hollow as mine? Is it not better to spend the time in taking more wine?

This terrible indictment of the man-made world has not been surpassed in Gujarāṭi literature.

VIII

But this attitude does not carry the author the full length of a militant feminist. In her essay on Strinā Svatāntra Vyaktitvāno Svikāra, Independent Personality of Women Accepted, she writes:

In creating the world of to-morrow, man will not be the sole agent; not even the woman by herself. It will be created by a new force, in which the individuality of both will have been harmonised.

Anubhava Vināna, again a short novel, depicts the struggle of inexperienced lovers against misfortune and poverty. But by far the best work of this kind is Panca Patro, Five Letters, a story told in letters written by an artist, Malavika, to her friend, Taralika. In the first letter she writes to her married friend:

Taralika, I cannot like an ordinary woman marry and be happy. Excuse me, if I appear proud, but I am born to be a queen. It is not in me to be humble and to cater to some one's happiness. I cannot be a garland of victory to some hero . . .

The second letter records the arrival of the lover.

I have fallen in love. The other day, I doubted whether I could love any living man. But now he has come with a master's authority, uninvited, and occupies my heart. I am willing to give up a world's dominion for a small house . . . Taralika! Can you conceive for whom I am writing all this? He is still unknown to me. I do not know him fully, or, rather, he does not know me fully. For, my soul knows him well for ages . . . I cannot understand how people can look at him with coolness or indifference. If there is svayamvara in Heaven, whom will the goddesses choose but him?

Her notions of art undergo a change. 'Art never comes to a lonely heart . . . The art of every ancient master twined round the figure of his beloved.'

The third letter expresses a more lyrical ecstasy, a complete surrender. In a style which reaches a high strung expressiveness, Malavikā informs her friend of her betrothal.

You know what love is. I have seen love, as it flowed out of your dancing eyes, enveloping your husband. But my love is different. My eyes alone do not merely feel satisfied when I look at him; every particle of my body and soul long to be merged in him, to be a part of him. Lovers intensely desire to become part of those they love; but my individuality reaches the Nirvāṇa of love only when it is completely lost in him. I cannot be a light shining apart from him. The ultimate goal of my love is to unite our two lights in one indivisible flame. But why do I say 'ultimate?' Even now there is no beginning and no end I know he will stand by me, and protect me in life as in death. And I? I am his. Who dares to separate him from me? No, not even the god of death himself.

The proud artist has learnt what religion could not teach her.

Religion teaches by coercion; by love, one learns without efforts. Artistic life was wonderful. A life of love is perfect. I had to hold on to art, but love has a supreme hold over me. Love is more eternal even than truth. We have to distinguish between the shades of eternal truth, but love is the same in every clime and in every people.

The fourth letter is also in the same vein.

. The very idea that I can live without him sounds unnatural. To-day when he is absent, I feel that the sun shines no more with its usual light, that I am living in a deserted place. God! Suppose he passed out of my life! The very thought is fearful. But no! The day he passes out of my life I will have ceased to live. We are not unaware of each other's imperfections. He is dearer to me because of his imperfections. And imperfect as I am, he is not sorry to have accepted me. Let the world feel happy over his perfections. To me his imperfections are priceless.

Malavika's lover has gone on a short journey. Four days later, an assistant in her studio writes to Taralika to come immediately; Makaranda, the lover, has died in an accident, and Malavika has been senseless since she heard the news. But before Taralika can start, Malavika dies. Her message of farewell is contained in the fifth letter.

Taralika, your Malavika is now wandering in unrelieved darkness. Her king, her soul, Makaranda, has left the world. She is now alone in this fearful wilderness. Sister mine, forgive me. I cannot see anything nor understand what people say. I only hear one voice calling out, "Malavika! Malavika." Friend, my king calls me. Yes, it is the same voice again. Lord, I am coming.

I cannot bear this. No, I cannot. I cannot live, cannot die. Life is gone. Death mocks me by its dilatoriness, and my lover must be waiting there for me. Even on his death-bed, he never forgot my name. Oh, beloved, why don't you take me away from this bondage.

Look! My eyes are now dry. They smile, for I am looking into his eyes. I cannot now read these letters. I cannot write. My love, in a sweet divine voice, commands me. Taruba, let me listen to him. Taruba, I just saw my lord, divinely beautiful. Taralika, dear, I am going. I am so happy, Taru, with my love.

Gujarāṭi prose rises to a lyrical greatness in this little story, so remarkable for its emotional intensity.

IX

Rekhācitra consists of character-sketches (i) of mythical, historical and literary personalities and (ii) of contemporary men and women, mostly Gujarātīs. Of the sketches under the first head, those of Padminī, Joan of Arc and Shelley are effusive, but by far the best are those of Draupadī and Aspasia. In Draupadī, the author finds a subject after her own heart, a powerful, strong-minded, ambitious woman, dominating an almost international situation pregnant with passion and strife. Full justice has been done to this flaming heroine of mythology. In Striomān Vasantāvātāra, The Spring of Womanhood, the character of Aspasia and her association with the great Pericles have been brilliantly and appreciatively drawn.

The sketches, which fall under the second head, are more in the nature of what are known as thumb-nail sketches. In each there is a small portrait, drawn by a few sure strokes which bring out the individuality of the persons treated in accurate relief. At places the author's penetrating glance almost vivisects the person and a few suggestive phrases describe the motive-springs which actuate him. The author in some of these has achieved great success in the difficult art of being intimate and vivid, true and unsparing and has given to the literature a new form of art.

X

Batubhai Lalbhai Umarvadia (Born 1899) has written several one-act plays, which are now collected in two volumes: Matsyagandhā and Gāngeya (1925) and Mālādevī and Bijā Nātako (1927). He has also written short stories and articles, the best of the series being Kamālā-na Patro. He has a very lively prose style, and has the gift of selecting a piquant psychological situation and enlivening it by his art. His Lomaharshinī is a little play about a man who, in moments of ecstasy, recognises a face beloved in some past life. The atmosphere full of mystery has been very skilfully produced. The author loves to utter an unexpected or awkward truth with the aggressive self-confidence of a fanatic and takes a sardonic delight in tearing the mask off moral and psychological sores.

XI

Ramanlal Vasantlal Desai (Born 1892) is the author of two plays Sānyuktā (1920) and Śankita Hrdaya (1925); and of novels styled Jayanta (1925), Śirisha (1927), Kokila (1928), Hrdayanātha (1930), Snehayajna (1931); Divyacakshu (1931), Bansari (1932), Grāmya Mātā, (1933) and of other miscellaneous works. The author's style is refined, flowing and unobtrusive, at times graceful. Śankita Hrdaya, The Suspicious Heart, is a play on the old model, but written in an arresting style. The stories, which are told with fluency, contain situations of great possibility and depict modern middle class life in Gujarāta. A strong note of admiration for modern Gujarāti life runs through all his works.

Of all novels of topical interest published after the Satyāgraha campaign of 1930, Divyacakshu is perhaps the most enjoyable. It is a story with wealth of incident. Non-violence, flag-salutation, procession, lathi-charge, congress hospital, jail, trial, removal of untouchability, love, self-sacrifice and heroism are all there; but one cannot help wishing that the author had worked out his situations more fully or worked on only a few. Everyone is so good, so noble, so much of a type, down to the superintendent of police and the magistrate, that one misses the actual atmosphere of political life. A pale atmosphere of heroic resolve and conduct, curiously unrealistic, pervades the whole work.

Snehayajna is a very well-told story of lovers, Kirit and Minakshi. Due to misunderstanding, Minakshi marries Surendra. Disappointment drives Kirit to the career of a terrorist and the cult of class-war. Years later, Kirit meets Minakshi, now Lady Surendra, wife of the Minister of Education. Old love revives; both the lovers realise their position; and each one separately decides to step aside to make the other happy. Kirit restores the domestic peace of Sir Surendra; Minakshi induces Kirit to marry Chameli, a charming girl whom Kirit had saved from kidnappers. Both Minakshi and Chameli are well drawn, and the final scene is drawn with rare delicacy of touch. The background of terrorism and class-war is vaguely drawn, and its unreality renders Kirit untrue to life, and parts of the novel weak. This novel is noteworthy as being the first attempt in the language by an author of recognised merit to introduce such a lurid background so happily unfamiliar to present day Gujarata. Grāmya-Matā tries to depict village life with unrealistic fervour.

XII

The realistic tendency in modern literature is nowhere more traceable than in the treatment of ordinary life with humour, satire and mockery. The old tradition of Dalpatram and Ramanbhai of writing an extravagant satire round an absurd character and impossible incidents have been kept up by a number of authors, prominent among whom are Hariprasad G. Bhatt known as Masta Fakir and Jagjivan T. Kothari who writes under the name of Olya Joshi. But mere fun derived in this manner is entirely different in quality from the humourous presentation of life, which alone has a permanent value in literature.

Ramnarayan Visvanath Pathak (Born 1887) is the author of short stories collected under the name of Dvirefa-ni-Vāto, The Stories of Dvirefa (1929), and of Swaira Vihāra, Irresponsible Rambles (1931) and a few charming poems. He has a delightfully telling style, invariably rich, and often picturesque. His humour is blended with pathos. He can pursue almost anything with a light playfulness or with an air of delicious mock-politeness. He avoids uproarious fun, and in both his works false notes are rare.

Swairavihāra is a collection of comments, which the author wrote, month after month, in his magazine Prasthāna. In this delightful little book, he has ranged over many subjects, developing them with great skill. He has shown no mercy to romanticism. Its exhuberance, conceits and lack of contact with the realities of life are targets for his sly and nimble attack. He has disguised his prejudices with the air of being an unimpeachable moralist. His criticism has been above pettiness, even when he has drawn blood. The author is at his best in ridiculing the artificial restriction of untouchability, not only with reference to human beings, but also to things like food cooked in water or contaminated by anything considered impure by religion or usage.

If a scavenger touches a thing, it becomes untouchable; if a high class Hindu is touched by a scavenger, he also becomes untouchable; but if he takes a bath, he becomes pure again. If you want to take coins touched by a dheda, you must sprinkle them with water. Water renders flour untouchable, but coins touchable. If a dheda touches clothes, they have to be washed before use, but if he touches a piece of cotton cloth not yet brought to use, a mere sprinkle of water will do. A cap, under similar circumstances, need not even be sprinkled with water; the touch of a Muslim will make it touchable. But if you touch a Muslim after your bath, the purifying effect of the bath will disappear. You can eat your food only after you have again taken your bath. Ghee (clarified butter) is never rendered untouchable. Just as scientists deal with electricity with the aid of an instrument with a glass handle, it would not be improper to touch a dheda with an instrument made of clarified butter. One can certainly beat a dheda with a stick of butter . . . Once lādus (sweets) had been prepared in large quantities and kept in one huge pot. A dog touched it. But preparing sweets over again was an expensive job, and would, moreover, take time. Our elders decided that the touch of a dog would not make all the sweets untouchable, but only just enough to equal its weight. We removed a dog-weight of sweets from the pot and ate the rest. But it was just as well that only a dog had touched them. What if it had been an elephant! But perhaps the touch of an elephant would not have rendered anything untouchable. But suppose it had been an ass!

Not a statement here is extravagantly conceived, and the presentation is enough to achieve the artistic effect.

XIII

The short stories are not so faultless. The author has not been able to sustain the spirit of mockery. When the pathos of the situation develops, the humourist vanishes. The incident round which a story turns is not so natural and realistic as the pictures woven into it. Khemi, in parts, is a wonderful story. It portrays the life-story of a scavenger woman. To have invested a subject of this kind with romantic interest and at the same time to make it correspond to actual life would have tried the art of even a master. And it is not surprising that the author should not have been able to maintain in the latter half of the story the splendid level which he attained in the beginning.

Dhaniya and Khemi are husband and wife, recently married, scavengers by caste and profession, low caste untouchables doomed to a degraded life. There is a caste dinner in the street which it is the lot of these unfortunates to sweep. The man who is giving the dinner orders them to sit at one end of the street to prevent unwelcome dogs from entering the street while the high-class guests are occupied with their dinner. The two lovers, engaged with their humble romance, let a stray dog enter the street. Confusion follows; and the host, wroth with the neglectful scavengers, drives them away. Humiliated, heart-broken, deprived of the crumbs of a rich dinner to which they had looked forward with such joy, they leave the locality. Khemi had got Dhaniya to take a vow never to touch alcohol; but, seeing his depression, she permits him to have a drink.

The tragedy of their life begins. Dhaniya, once the vow is broken, lets himself go, becomes a drunkard, and often beats and abuses Khemi. She runs away to Nadiad, and obtains employment as a scavenger in the municipality. But she loves her poor husband and cannot help going back to him. Debts have accumulated, and are paid in part by moneys borrowed on the pledge of Khemi's ornaments.

Then the story begins to suffer in execution. She sees her husband in the grip of despair and vice, but has no heart to quarrel with him or to deny him anything. Later, he dies. Left alone, she feels that her husband died because they had not the money to fulfil a vow taken by him. An astrologer advises her to fulfil it as the benefit will go to her husband though he is dead. She goes back to her work and drudges wearily for seven long years to collect the money wherewith to fulfil the vow. She receives offers of remarriage but declines to accept them; for she still loves Dhaniya's memory.

The story ends with her message to a wooer that it is too late to patch up her life by a second marriage. And the reader is left with a half-suppressed sob, contemplating the tragic greatness of this humble, lonely woman.

By portraying Khemi, the author has vindicated the modern literary point of view of seeking romance even among the lowliest of the lowly.

XIV

The works of Dhansukhlal Krishnalal Mehta (Born 1890) are: Hui Sarala ane Mitramandala, I, Sarala and Friends, (1920); Asādhārana Anubhava ane Biji Vato, Uncommon Experiences and Other Stories (1924); Bhūla no Bhoga ane Bicāro, The Victim of a Blunder (1921); Vinoda Vihāra, Humorous Sketches (1931); Hāsyavihāra (1931); Vārta Vihār (1932); and Bhutnā Bhadrā (1932). The unevenness and profusion with which the author writes have obscured a just appreciation of his position in literature as a humourist. In his best pieces the style is homely, racy, colloquial, always subordinating style to manner of presentation. He never goes far afield in search of humour, but finds it in the actual work-a-day life around him. Dhansukhlal's art can be fully enjoyed only by a man who has sometime or other lived in a small town in Gujarāta. As you read his works you almost come to love the everyday life of modern Gujarāta in spite of its shortcomings.

Jyotindra Hariharshanker Dave's (Born 1901) humorous sketches are written in a characteristic rambling fashion and have hardly any plot or incident. Paragraphs very often look like long parentheses. He never sneers, never tries to be funny, never cracks a joke. He goes round and round some foible in such detail and with such solemnity, that a fabric rises, like a tower of Babel, but only to topple over the next minute under the sheer weight of absurdity. He has a sure eye to human weakness which he exposes by being whimsical about them. In this, he is aided by the resources of a very refined style, rich imagination and a well-stored memory. Ranga Taranga (1932), Whims and Fancies, contains a collection of marvellous skits. His elaborate and whimsical introduction to Alpātma-nu-Atmapurāna, Autobiography of an Insignificant Soul, is a masterpiece. Mari Nondhapothi, My Diary (1933) is also a remarkable work, in which comments on current topics are elevated to the level of humorous literature. The author is also a sound and promising literary critic, and has ably reviewed current literature for years in the Gujarāta.

XV

Since the days of Dalpatram, the folklore of Kāthiāvāda has exercised a weird fascination on the minds of literary men of Gujarāta. For centuries, the little peninsula has been the battleground of small but sturdy races, whose primitive instincts have not yet been totally subjugated by the civilizing forces which rule the mainland. The country is woody, hilly and in part barren. And herdsmen and kolis, kāthis and rajputas live there in fierce hostility to men and nature. At places, the primitive traditions of their fore fathers is their only law.

Every hamlet has its little durbar, a garasia who maintains the dignity of his descent with pride and zeal. He is the bapu, the lord and master, who holds a tiny court, and has a family bard. He talks ceremoniously, and rides about on his sprightly mare dreaming of heroic deeds. He is gay in his own way, and makes love violently, and in chivalry can give points to the knights of mediaeval Europe. He holds life cheap, his own and that of others; he will go to the Gira forest and calmly face a lion, single handed; and the slightest insult will turn him into a deadly outlaw. He defends his family honour or his acre of land with the same grim determination with which Raṇā Pratāpa of Mevāḍa defied the invaders of India. His women are robust, fierce, untamable, who love violently and observe an inexorable law of loyalty to their lord. Even in these days, given provocation, he will like a knight errant attack a wedding party and carry off the bride on his brave steed, and an unwilling bride, not uncommonly, will send word to her lover to save her in high romantic style from a threatened marriage. Every village has its little battlefield; every family has its palias, the little stone monuments which mark the spot where its members fell fighting.

It was left to some authors of this period not only to rescue a part of this orally preserved literature, but to bring its wealth of passion, imagination and expression into the pool of modern Gujarātī literature. Many men have dedicated themselves to the study of this cārāṇī (bardic) literature, and volumes of it have already been published.

XVI

Zaverchand Kalidas Meghani (Born 1897) has been a prominent worker in this field. Himself a poet, he has dedicated himself to the work of making this literature available to modern Gujarāta in a comprehensible form. He has published many stories in a series of volumes entitled Saurāshtrāṇī Rasadhārā, The Poetic Stream of Saurāshtra. His prose style has absorbed some elements of the cārāṇī style.

Some of his stories testify to the cordial relations which existed between Hindus and Mussalmans in the pre-British period. When Haloji, the Rajputa prince of Rānpur, after successfully resisting the attempts of the Sultan of Ahmedabad to convert him to Islam, returns home, his brother's wife does not let him touch water because he has lived with Muslims. In high dudgeon, he goes back to the Sultan and accepts Islam. But when Mussalman dacoits attempt to rob the Hindus of Rānpur of their cows, he fights them sword in hand and rescues the sacred cattle. When he dies, he is canonised as Hala Pir by the Muslims; but his widow gets the Sultan to grant the land surrounding his tomb in charity for grazing cows.

Another story runs thus. The Sumra of Sindh covets the beautiful daughter of a Jat convert to Islam. In the fight which ensues between him and the Jats, over a thousand of the latter are killed, and the rest seek the aid of the Paramāras. Hundreds of Mussalman Jats and the Rajputa Paramāras lay down their lives side by side for the honour of a Mussalman maid. On the hill of Mandava, two men lie mortally wounded, one a Muslim, the other a Hindu. The Mussalman, in his last moments, sees his blood flowing out in a stream to mingle with that of his Hindu friend. But he is a loyal friend; he does not want his Mussalman blood to pollute his friend's Hindu blood in the moment of death. As he lies dying, with trembling hands he builds a little ridge of dust between them two to divert the stream of his blood. The Paramāra sees this last act of friendliness, but will not brook the spirit of estrangement which lies behind it. With dying breath he shouts, "Isa ! Remove the ridge. Let us not remain separate even in death !"

Many sects in Kāthiāvāḍa followed both the Hindu and Muslim forms of worship. The verses of Kahandas Medu, an orthodox Hindu, who successfully prayed to a Muslim Pir for his release from British hands, illustrate the common bond which subsisted between the two communities.

This wicked brown one¹ is angry. He has fastened iron fetters on me ; put me in a cell ; locked me in ; and placed guards on it. Oh, merciful Mahomed Pir of the Sea ! Come to my help and break my fetters.

He speaks in an incomprehensible tongue ; he puts on a short coat ; he is merciless ; he has a gun in his hand, a hat on his head. He does not care for the good and the saintly. He eats things which both the Hindus and the Muslims hold in horror. Oh, merciful Mahomed Pir of the Sea ! Come to my help and break my fetters.

He is not a Kshatri, not a Śūdra, not a Vaiśya, not a Brahmāṇa. He is neither a Hindu nor a Mussalman. What is his caste ? He is unclean ; he eats uneatables ; he bathes without clothes. Oh, merciful Mahomed Pir of the Sea ! Come to my help and break my fetters.

He observes neither the ida nor the utsava. He does not bow to the village deities. He has no Koran, no Gita, no sacred acts. He does not speak the language of the gods ; he is not reliable ; he is treacherous both ways. Oh ! merciful Mahomed Pir of the Sea ! Come to my help and break my fetters.

The story of Sohiṇī-Mehār is a love story common to the folklore of Kaccha, Kāthiāvāḍa and Sindha. Sohiṇī, the daughter of a potter, every mid-night, crosses the Indus with the aid of well-baked earthen pot to meet her lover Mehār. When he comes to know of it, her father, preferring honour to his daughter's life, substitutes an unbaked pot for the one with which she crosses the river. That night, the pot dissolves in mid-river. Her father has out-witted her ; he has chosen that she should die in water than live in dishonour !

She hears the distant notes of her lover's flute. She struggles against the waves with her tired arms. But her progress is very slow. Time flies, and she feels anxious about her lover's impatience. She has to swim a long way; but she can no longer do so. 'And she saw Israel, the Angel of death, before her and her heart left to meet her lover.' As she sinks, her piteous cries ring out, "Mehtar ! Mehtar !" The impatient Mehtar hears his beloved's voice, throws his flute away, and weak with wounds though he is, flings himself into the river. Sohini is caught by the dread reptiles of the waters, and with her last breath she cries, "Mehtar ! go back. I am caught by the reptiles." But Mehtar swims fast and furiously, but is too late to save her. Sohini is drowned. With her name on his lips, her lover also gives up his efforts to swim and sinks—to rise no more.

1 The Europeans were in the last century styled ḅhura, the brown.

The morning breaks. The corpses of the lovers are found ashore, united in death as they tried to be in life. And the world gives them a common grave.

Meghani's poems are also moulded on the old poetry of Kāthiāvāḍa, and, except where quaint and archaic features predominate, they provide striking modern editions of old world songs. Chello Katoro, Last Cup, contains the message which he sent to Mahātmā Gandhi when the latter left for England in 1930 to attend the Round Table Conference. In this piece the poet has caught with rare art the shades of feeling prevalent in Gujarāta on that occasion.

XVII

Damodar Khushaldas Botadker (1870-1924) the author of several poems, now collected in five volumes, Kallolini (1912), Srotasvini (1918) Nirzariṇi (1929) Rasa-tarangini (1923) and Śaivalini (1930). He was at his best in describing objects of nature and domestic affections.

Keshav Sheth (Born 1889) is a poet of considerable charm and originality. One of his poems, Bhava'avi, illustrates how the elements of the old vairagya poetry have been fused with those of modern English poetry to produce a fresh poetic and artistic impulse.

I have lost my way, I wander day and night. Saints ! Lead me to the path
In my native land the sun never rose and set every day. Eternal splendour illuminated it ; its light pierced through the skies to reach the earth. Saints lead me to the path.

Here, the hot breezes of the world blows out the lamp in every home here; life is stunted. But in my land, immortals live. Saints! Lead me to the path.

My life, here, swings on a dream of transient love which blooms at morn and dies at eve. Saints! Lead me to the path divine.

Fire burns at every step; darkness blinds the eye. The mortal frame is weary with the load of life. I have lost my way. Saints! Lead me to the path immortal.¹

Chandravadan Chimanlal Mehta's (Born 1901) Ilakavya consists of sonnets deliciously playful or inexpressibly sad, written on two young ladies, since dead, whom the author looked upon as sisters. The last poem, Visarjana, describing maddening grief with graphic extravagance is a characteristic poem.

Lord! Quench all Thy planets in the sea: End this mighty dance of Yours, I pray. And if, when the final destructive waters spread, Your strength fails You—take the tears as they well forth from my eyes.

When fiery winds blow over the worlds, and shatter the fathomless caves scorching the earth as they roar, if one mighty wind You want—take one of the sighs, seething in my heart; it will be enough.

If when the sky is overcast with glowing cinders, as the lightning-riven mountains burst out in flames, You want thunder, stunning as Indra's bolt—Oh!—borrow a stray throb from my heart.

This sigh and tear, and the throb of my heart, will form part then, Oh Lord, when a new creation is born.²

-
1. भूली पंथ भमं दिन रात रे, कोइ संत बतावो जी वाट :
 ऊगो सूरज बळी आथमे एवी न्होती म्हारी मूळ भोम ;
 ज्योति अखंड झगे जहिं, जेनां तेज ढळे बींधी व्योम:
 कोइ संत बतावो ए वाट.
 संसारने हूने वायरे थाय घरघरना दीप गुल ;
 जीवन एवां अहिनां व्हेंतियां : म्हारे मुलक अमरोनां कुळ :
 कोइ संत बतावो ए वाट :
 उषाने अधरे खीलतो ने सन्धाने कांठे विलाय ;
 एवा रे स्नेहने सोणले म्हारं जीवतर झोलां खाय ;
 कोइ संत बतावो दिव्य वाट :
 पगले पगले पावक प्रजळे, आंख्ये ठ्यो अन्धकार,
 पामर देहनी पीठ पडी वही भवरण केरो भार :
 हवे संत दोरो सुरवाट.
 2. प्रभो ! छंकारी दे सकळ ग्रह, तारा, उदधिमां,
 अने संकेली ले षडिकमहिं आ रास रमवा ;

The world revolutions have found their echoes in many poems. Ramchandra Shukla's (Born 1905) sonnet on Āndhi, Tornado, is a resounding song of hope.

Tribhuvan Purshottam Luhara—Sundaram—(Born 1908) is a young poet of great promise, whose poems, collected in Kavyamangala, (1933) indicate the new spirit.

When the world is drenched by endless monsoon showers, I am also wet. But all things flower, why alone should I wither—the question arises, heart confounding.

The mountain-peak—is it to be seen only? Is it to bear the lightning bolts—to be shattered only? Will stones never blossom? No? Will man never sprout forth something new?¹

चढी चोपासे जो प्रलयपूर व्यापे पलकमां,
 ग्रही लेजे मारं दृगजल खूट्ये शक्तिमहिमा !
 त्रूटे गेबी गुहा, अनलसरखा विश्वफरता
 फरे झंझावातो, फरी फरी बंधुंये जग सीसे ;
 खूटे ए वायु तो हृदयभरमां दाह दवता
 निसासामांथी ये प्रलयपूर तो एक ग्रहजे !
 अने प्हाडोना जो वीजतणखथी काटेज फुटे,
 उना अंगाराथी गगनपट व्यापे रजरजे,
 परंतु वज्रोशा दढ वीजकडाका कदी खूटे,
 अरे आ हैयानी उरधबक एकाद ग्रहजे !
 निसासा, आँखु ने उरधबक सर्वे मुज वही
 थशे नकी देवा ! तुज मय नवा सर्जन महीं.

- 1 झरंत धारे नवलक्ष वर्षा,
 भीजाय पृथ्वी, पलछुं य हुं त्यां,
 खीले बधां ने करमाउं हुं कां ?
 मूंझावता हृदय प्रश्न उठे तझकी.
 शुं टोच तो मात्र निहाळवानी ?
 के वीजळीघा सही तूटवानी ?
 शुं पत्थरे पल्लव बेसशे—ना ?
 शुं फूटशे अवर कैं नहिं मानवीथी ?

In Jindagīnā Navāne, he voices the feelings of Gujarāṭī lovers as they spend their days in jail instead of in their homes during Āṣāḍha, the month made sacred for parted lovers by Meghadūta.

In my land, once our joys were such as these; to-day our lot is to enjoy the night of love in other ways. In prisons our bodies are cast; angry destruction is everywhere; from our heart's deep caves resounds the war cry of heroes, when clouds are threatening overhead and the season of life is changing.¹

And a wild song of vaulting ambition which characterizes vain man in these days is Śunyaśeṣha, Nothing Left, by Krishnalal Shridharani (Born 1911) in his work Kodiyān. (1934)

No, I will not lie in dust, dirty, and trodden by the feet of cattle. Flushed with wealth and pomp I will stand, obstructing the sky-kissing palace, and the pride of Kubera. But I will not be content. Great as a world-conqueror I will be, holding sway over nine continents washed by the seven seas; I will bestride a flaming volcano, and grasp the heavens with my hands.²

Planets, flitting comets, starry mist, aye, stars will shine like a crown on my proud head. And round my all pervading body, the milky way—the stream of gods—like unto a garland of glittering lights—will be but a waist band.

Now Thou alone is left: I spring to seize Thee. The Father—does he lie at my feet? Yes: I stand all—enveloping, looking down on Thee rolling in dust.²

1. मारा देशे पण सुख बधां एकदा एम माप्यां,
आजे जूदी प्रणयरजनी माणवानी अमारे :
कारागारे अम तन पड्यां शृंखलाना पथारे,
रौद्रा लीला अवर प्रगटे, मर्दनां जंगगाणां
ऊठे गाजी जनजन तणां अन्तरोने उंडाणे,
ज्यारे बारे घन उलटता जीन्दगीने नवाणे
2. नहिं ! नहिं ज पालवे शयन पांसुपे पाशवी
खरी, चरण, डाबला मलिन स्पर्श मेली बनी :
उभीश अवरोधतो गगनचुंबी प्रासादने,
श्रीमंत मुज वैभवे, धनकुबेरना नादने.
न तोय परितृप्तिः सप्त जलसागरे गाजता
नवे नव द्वीपे, भूपे, सकळलोकमां राजताः
जहांगीर-महान को भरख-ज्वाल-ज्वालासुखी
तणे मुख विराजीने गगनने भरं हुं मूठी.

And a little thing of beauty by Umāshankar Joshi (Born 1911) from his Gangotri (1934).

Love, at eventide Venus, speck-like, will shine on the forehead of the West, twinkling in momentary flashes. In this light, come and stand for a while, your eye hooked to it. I will come there and hook my eye to it too. And, love, when eye with eye shall have been strung, we shall swing on it. There we shall meet.¹

Among the promising poets may also be mentioned Sundarji Betai, Mansukhlal Jhaveri, Ramanlal Vakil and Sneharaśmi.

XVIII

History has been generally neglected by Gujarāṭi authors. Mahadeva Haribhai Desai (Born 1892), however, in his Bārdoli Satyāgraha (1928) has provided a remarkable specimen of this branch of literature. In this work the author is not content to give a mere narrative of events. He is vivid without being picturesque, and achieves literary effect without apparent effort. When one writes about contemporary events in the shaping of which himself and his associates had a large share, it is well-nigh impossible to maintain balance and self-restraint. But Mahadeva

ग्रहो, तरल धूमकेतुय, निहारिका तारला,
मुकुट सम राजता महत मानवी-हुं-शिरेः
प्रदीप विचिमाल्यशी सुरसरितनी मेखला,
विराट मम देहनी कटिपरे प्रभा विकिरे.
हवे तुं कर आमलुं ! उच्छळतो तने झालवाः
पिता मुज पदे पडयो ? मलिन पांसुपे न्याळवा
तने, शरीर आ विराट मुज आज आडुं खडुं.

1. सखे ! सन्ध्याकाले,
प्रतीचीने भाले टिलडी टमके शुक्रकणिका,
पलक झवके ज्योत क्षणिका.
थती तेजोवृष्टि,
परोवी त्यां दृष्टि अनिमिष घडी वार उभजे !
हुंय नजर सांधीश तहीं, ने.
सुरश्मि अंकोरे,
सखे ! दष्टिदोरे पळ उमळकेथी झुली रही,
उभय मळसुं आपण तहीं.

Desai has attempted the impossible with success. His Vira Vallabhbhai (1928) and Sant Francis (1933) are biographical sketches written with great literary skill and deserve a high place in the literature of the kind.

More than one literary history of Gujarāṭa has been written. Dahyabhai Derasari's (Born 1857) Saṭhī-na Saṭhi-yanu Digdarśana, Review of The Literature of Sixty Years, gave a valuable survey of the literary activities of the age of Narmad. D. B. Krishnalal Mohanlal Jhaveri's (Born 1868) two volumes, written in English, Milestones (1914), and Further Milestones in Gujarati Literature (1921)¹ constitute the first attempt at presenting a connected history of Gujarāṭi literature since the times of Narsinha Mehtā. The Reports of the Sāhitya Parishad are a valuable mine for the future literary historian. Mohanlal Dalichand Desai provides a comprehensive cyclopaedia of Jaina poets in Jaina Gurjara Kavio Vol. I (1926) Vol. II (1931). Gujarāṭi Sahitya (1929), edited by me, is a collection of articles by well-known scholars on the tendencies in literature from Narsinha Mehtā to Dayarāma.

Literary and historical research has been steadily carried on during this period under the auspices of many societies and institutions including the Gujarati Forbes Sabhā at Bombay, the Gaekwad's Oriental Research Department at Baroda, the Gujarāṭa Vernacular Society and the Purātatva Mandir at Ahmedabad, and by several individual scholars.

Biography did not advance much beyond the elementary efforts of Mahipatram's early efforts, Karsondas Mulji nun cāritra and Durgaram Mehtaji nun Cartria, till 1910, when Kantilal Chhaganlal Pandya (Born 1886) wrote an excellent life of Govardhanram Tripathi. Vinayak Nandshankar Mehta wrote the biography of his father, Nandshankarjivanacitra (1917), in which the times and contemporary personalities are portrayed with remarkable vividness. Shankarprasad Chhaganlal Raval (Born 1888), a literary critic of note, in his Daya-

1. They have been translated into Gujarāṭi.

rāmacaritra (1919) has provided a highly appreciative survey of the life and work of the poet. Viśvanāth Maganlal Bhatt's (Born 1898) Vīra Narmad (1933) is, however, the only well documented and brilliantly written biography in the language.

XIX

The journalistic achievements of Gujarāta are great. A new tradition was set up by Haji Mahomed Allarakhia Shivji, a Khoja author, by starting Vismī Sadi in 1917. It was an illustrated magazine, high-class from the point of view both of literature and art, and almost all the best authors and artists of Gujarāta contributed to its unique popularity. Its brilliant career came to an end in 1921. In 1922, Gujarāta began to be published on similar lines¹; but its traditions were different as it was the organ of Sāhitya Sansad, a literary society with pronounced modern tendencies. Navacetana in Calcutta and Śarda in Rajkot pursue similar lines. Kumāra has uniformly maintained a high level in art and literature.

Sahitya, edited by Matubai Hargovandas Kantavala (Died 1933) published many works of Old Gujarāti poets. Matubhai as a critic exercised great influence on modern literature by the sanity and justice of his literary notices. Merciless on faults of style and grammar, he fought with unwavering zeal a losing battle for a return to the simple and non-Saṃskṛtic style. He was also the author of several short stories collectively published under the names of a Samsāra-līlā (1931) and Vitak-nī vāto (1932).

Prasthāna provides thoughtful reading. Kaumudī now the organ of the Sahitya Sansad is a carefully edited magazine mainly devoted to literary criticism. Vijayrai Kalyanrai, (Born 1897) its editor, is a brilliant stylist and a powerful critic. As a critic he is intensely human; he applauds, judges or condemns with the living sympathies of a literary artist and thus introduces valuable elements of creative imagination into his judgment. Purātatva, a quarterly edited by the

1. This magazine, which was edited by me for nine years and later by Dhansukhlal Mehta and Jyotindra Dave, ceased publication in August 1932.

Puratatva Mandir of Ahmedabad, was a magazine full of valuable research; and its disappearance has left a void which has not been filled.

XX

During the whole of this period, the professional stage muddled through. Current problems are of late being introduced on the stage, though the experiment has reduced the present generation to the sad plight of having to witness in all plays, Puranic, historical and modern, a character in some shape or another which looks like a mockery of Mahatma Gandhi, a sprinkling of Gandhi caps, and the saffron saris of the Desha Sevikas.

But a love of realism among the educated has created enthusiasm for amateur theatricals.¹ The ugly tradition of men masquerading as women has been definitely broken and so also the belief that Gujarāṭī women of respectability cannot act well on the stage. Evidently the future of the Gujarāṭī stage is in the hands of amateurs.

XXI

Among weeklies, Nāvajivana, of course, stood on a pedestal of its own. Amratlal Sheth's Saurāshtra, published in Ranpur, had a fine literary quality unknown to weekly journalism. Bombay Samāchar, by reason of its being the best weekly newspaper, perhaps leads the circulation of any other similar paper in India. Hindustan and Prajāmitra attained popularity by its advocacy of socialism and advanced thought. Kaiser-i-Hind, one of the oldest weeklies is the most advanced journal of the Parsis. In addition to these, over a dozen weeklies are published in Bombay and the district towns in Gujarāṭa, some being devoted solely to light literature. Of the latter variety, Be Ghadi Mauja edited by Shayda, a prolific Mahomedan author, is a good specimen.

1. Some years ago, students in Baroda, under the direction of Pranlal Munshi, author of Balidāna and other plays, staged Ramanlal Desai's Sankhita-Hydaya with success. In Bombay, Chandravadan Chimanlal Mehta has devoted the best part of his energies for years to organising amateur theatricals among students. And Purshottam Tricumdas, author of Hāthimā Dānta (1931) and other smart plays, directed the Gujarati Amateurs when in 1928 they first staged Kākāni-Sasi with conspicuous success, opening up great literary and artistic possibilities. Recently (January 1935) the Sahitya Sansad produced a ballet in Bombay in which a few notable incidents in the life of Narsinha Mehta were expressed through dance, song and music, remarkably artistic for a first experiment of the kind.

Among the dailies, Bombay Samāchar, now 120 years old, Sānj Vartmān, Hindustān and Janmabhūmi are nationalist papers and command a very large circulation. Jame-Jamshed, which celebrated its centenary in 1932, is more or less a social paper intended for the orthodox Parsis. Outside Bombay, Ahmedabad alone has a daily newspaper. During the Civil Disobedience movement in 1930 there was scarcely a town which had not at least one unauthorised Congress bulletin, either a daily or a weekly.

As a result of these activities, a whole race of enterprising Gujarātī journalists has come into existence. Publicity has been reduced to a fine art and journalism has been flavoured with literary elegance. The art of writing 'leaders' has reached a high level in the language. These journalistic activities had a tremendous influence on the Gujarātīs, contributing in no small measure to their progress, consolidation and political importance.

Numerous publishing agencies have come into existence, but of these, Sastu-sāhitya Kāryālaya of Swami Akhadas and is in a class by itself. It has rendered available a very large volume of literature, religious, moral and intellectual, at a price which all except the poorest can afford.

Among the scholarly and elaborate lexicons in the language after Narmad's work may be mentioned the Gujarātī Shabda Kośa undertaken by the Gujarat Vernacular Society and the exhaustive Gomandala which is being prepared under the guidance of Maharaja Bhagvatsinhji, the enlightened ruler of Gondal. Derasari's Paurāṇika Kathā Kośa, Dictionary of Mythology (1927) and Viśvanath Bhatt's Paribhāshika Kośa (1930) are also published by the G. V. Society. Jodanī Kośa (1929), published by the Gujarat Vidyāpitha has greatly helped to standardise spelling in the language.

CONCLUSION

Broadly speaking, there have been two corresponding tendencies in literature. These tendencies, by their interaction, have produced rhythmic movements in the evolution of Gujarātī language and literature. The individuality of the people has led to freedom and variety ; to the introduction of racy idioms in the language ; to the recurrence of the story and the garabī as favourite forms ; to an irrepressible romanticism ; to a persistent tendency to relate literature to the realities of life. The Aryan influences, time after time, have restored refinement and expressiveness to the language ; super-imposed Saṁskṛtic forms and traditions ; and contributed grace and technical perfection to literary art.

The alternate movements which were thus produced were distinct in the past, sometimes separated from each other by a long period of time. We can trace the two alternate movements in Taraṅgalolā and the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa ; in Samāraiccākahā and Rāvaṇavadha ; in Muñja-rāsa and Dvāśraya ; in Kaṇḍadeprabandha and Bhālaṇa's Kādambarī. For a time the two movements met in Narasinha, but only to indicate by marked contrast their independence in ordinary literature. Premānanda's ākhyānas, stories alive with realistic art, were the characteristic expression of the Gujarātī life of the day. Akho's works reflected the moral, intellectual and literary decline which was overtaking India. Dayārāmā's works had a distinctly two-fold aspect. His religious works, imbued with Vaiṣṇavism, were an intellectual performance which indicated his responsiveness to the decadent influences at the centre. His garabīs freed Gujarātī literature both from classic pedantry and unreal didacticism.

But, in modern times, the forces which have successfully absorbed foreign influences have imparted speed and intensity to these movements. The works of Narmad, Govardhanram, Narsinhrao and Nanalal owe their variety and fertility as much to revivalist tendencies as to stimulating contact with the West. Modern authors are the product of the steady composite literary energy which all these influences have generated

Modern Gujarātī literature has seen revolution in technique, outlook and creative art. The pedantry of decadent Samskr̥tic traditions is gone. Language has begun a steady march to purity and unity, to plastic strength and all-sided power. A new poetry and prose have come into being. Mechanical prosody is a thing of the past; experiments in new metres have enlarged the boundaries of poetic achievement. The lyric, the sonnet, the ballad, the khaṇḍa-kāvya and the khand-ākhyāna have paved the way for fresh triumphs. Garabī has become a thing of beauty. Prose has become expressive, forceful and picturesque. The essay, the novel and the short story have attained a high level of artistic execution.

But creative art still runs in restricted grooves, limiting both quality and variety. The heights of lyrical and epic poetry have not even been sighted. The social story is not come of age. The drama is in its infancy. Criticism, history and biography are yet struggling into existence.

Literature, as a whole, now caters for audience which grows in size, knowledge and taste, and is familiar with the literary traditions of Ancient India and Modern Europe. The exigencies of recital do not limit the nature of literary form; and dramatic treatment of incident and character has introduced vividness to literary effort. Life as drawn in literature is no longer set in the Purāṇic mould; other-worldliness is all but gone. Romance occupies an important place. The bloodless Romanticism of the akhyānas has been re-shaped by Romanticism of which Rousseau was the father; and in its upward movement it has, no doubt, manifested extravagance of form, expression and imagination. Last few years, however, have witnessed a steady approach towards re-alism, a more restrained but effective expression, and a greater sense of proportion. .

Literature is becoming more of a personal art. Individuality of product is now the rule, production by the pattern the exception. Literary movements tend somewhat to reflect corresponding movements in English literature, though adaptations or translations from English works do not find much favour. Search for the exact word, the necessary document, the appropriate form is coming into vogue. Fancy desires to soar, if possible, on wings of erudition, which, however, is of an elementary character. High intellectual pursuits do not, as a rule, attract a Gujarātī; erudition is generally of a superficial kind; and deep research and pure thought have remained inaccessible so far. Criticism has begun, though in a little way, to lead the way.

Social difficulties which mainly provided subjects for literature are being replaced by more elemental motives. Political situation, though not the economic, has begun to influence higher forms of literature. The Gandhian upheaval has profoundly influenced both language and literary output. But it has not yet produced artists who could influence the literary development as a whole. No doubt, attempts are made under its influence to relate literature to life. But, realism being yet imperfectly understood, they generally consist of a fantastic idolatry of everything appertaining to village life, or an insistence on the homely as the beautiful and the artistic as unnatural and, therefore, ugly: both dangerous tendencies for the progress of literature. Sympathy for the down-trodden is found in plenty. But, following Western models, an undertone of accusation against the rich, the powerful, and the cultured is heard, though the notes often echo the sneers at the world and its attraction with which the literature in Old Gujarātī was full.

On the whole, the literature has a pronounced tendency to be effeminate or sensuous; to be verbose, preferring sound to sense, stooping to verbal tricks to cover lack of beauty. It has, for instance, not yet attained the stature of modern Bengali literature. It has hardly any original literature in philosophy or research. Not more than a dozen works can be classed among the best artistic literary productions of the last hundred years in India. The literary achievement of Ancient India and of the West are beyond its scope, perhaps, for a long time to come. The art of the great masters of the world's literature does not inspire creative effort in Gujarāta. But higher literary traditions are in the process of being formed and a swifter movement may make up for lost time.

Conventions no longer stifle free movements in Gujarāta. The life of the present is not a mere prelude to the other world. Passionate desire to reach the heights of joy and power and wisdom within man's allotted days, inspires both life and literature. A struggle, as of some mighty Prometheus, has been stirring the soul of Gujarata. Life indistinctly resounds with faint echoes of songs which sing of new hope, life and beauty. A vision of new Gujarāta is before us, a Gujarāta, one and indivisible; free, strong and rich; with its fertility restored, its banking strengthened, its shipping revived; with its men and women forging a new tradition and culture, seeking self expression in noble forms of literary art.

.

But Gujarāta can have no existence apart from India. Intimate relations bind Gujarāta to Mahārāshtra, Kanārā, and Sindh, and ally it to Māravāḍa and part of Rajputānā. Nationalism dominates the present and will largely control the near future. And all provincial pride and distinctiveness will continue to find self-fulfilment in merging itself into a sense of greater unity.

Gujarāta, again, can have no meaning and no future except as an expression of Indian culture. The spirit of Āryan culture has, in the past, obliterated provincial boundaries and struggled to create literary and artistic unity despite the difference of script and language. With modern civilization to provide facilities and nationalism to furnish political leverage, its unifying activities are sure to bear early fruit. Within a decade or two, we may see a growing national language and a commonwealth of literatures, to which each Indian province will have contributed its best and noblest.

Āryan culture is not the apparatus of life, not the stories by which the mother of the Vedic Ṛshi ground corn, not the canoe by which Rāma and Sitā crossed the Sarayu, not the charkha in which many see the embodiment of its spirit. The civilization of India, that is, its technological and institutional equipment, has varied, or, been borrowed from others from age to age. The bridges which span our rivers, the mills which weave our cloth and the legislatures which resound with our political hopes and disappointments are not ours by invention but by adoption. They are the permanent possessions of mankind, which influence culture no doubt but do not constitute it. Similarly our social habits, the caste, the family, the marriage system are but crusts of life, not life itself. Even the social and religious beliefs by which culture was propagated and preserved in Gujarāta in the past do not in themselves constitute it. These change with time, with the civilization of each age.

This culture, however, is to be found in the sense of continuity; in the consciousness of Indian unity; in the permanent values in which the Āryans have always seen the fulfilment of life; in the ethical and idealistic absolutes which have moulded the Aryan outlook on the eternal questions: What is life? What is its purpose and end? The conception of life as pure Joy—as Idea above and beyond the fluctuating uncertainty of existence—alone gives its distinctive greatness. In the use of materialistic power by an indomitable and all-pervasive Idealism lies the secret of India's undying life; in the triumph of the latter over the former, the only hope for humanity.

As we saw, every generation of Gujarātis has won its own variety of this culture afresh. And so does the present generation of Gujarātis hope to do, only more intensively and comprehensively. And it struggles on to-day in the hope that, when the day comes, its contribution to India's literary and cultural renaissance will be as great as its present share in its political and economic advancement.

APPENDIX.

GUJARĀTĪ PROSODY.

Classical Metres—Sandhis—Gujarātī Metres—Deśī—Garabī—Modern Experiments.

Gujarātī verse is in (a) classical metres, (b) metres from Apabhraṃśa, and (c) deśī melodies. The classical metres are (i) Aksharachandas, (ii) Mātrāchandas and (iii) Anuṣṭubh.¹ For the purpose of Gujarātī prosody metres can be more appropriately classified on the basis of rhythm or mela. The unit of rhythm is sandhi, the rhythmic foot.² It is an aggregate of syllables on the last of which falls the tāla, or the time-beat, essential for rhythmic utterance. Sandhis are constituted of a fixed number of (i) syllables or aksharas; (ii) of rūpa, or a fixed syllabic quantity (long or short); (iii) of Mātras, or morae, substitution of a long for two short syllables or vice versa being freely resorted to; (iv) and of laya, a time compass consisting of syllables which could be recited between two time-beats or tālas.

The number of lines, difference in the length or the nature of sandhis, or a difference in their order, in each verse, results in different metres. The metres are called aksharamela, rūpamela, mātrāmela, or layamela chandas according to the nature of the sandhi which predominates in the verse.

1. Aksharmelas include Kavita, Manahara and Ghanāksharī.
2. Rūpamela, based on syllabic quantity, include many of the classical vṛttas. In the course of a line, the same sandhi may be repeated as in Toṭaka, or, it may be different as in Mandākrāntā.
3. In mātrāmela, eight different sandhis are generally used, but substitution of two shorts for a long or vice versa is permissible. These metres are found in Saṃskṛta, Prākṛta and Apabhraṃśa literature. Āryā and Gīti are in this class.
4. In layamela, syllables are often arbitrarily lengthened, shortened or suppressed to suit time and yields great freedom. Even

1. Keith, History of Sanskrit Literature, p. 417. Apte, Dictionary of Sanskrit, Appendix I.

2. For detailed discussion of the scheme, vide D. B. Keshavlal Dhruva's learned treatise, Paḍyāracaṇāno Līkhāṣa, (1932).

in such metres, in the hands of competent poets, the rūpa or mātrā sandhi is also maintained.

Mahākāvya in Apabhraṃśa are generally made up of sandhis, each of which is a collection of kaṭavakas. A kaṭavaka is in paddhaḍikā or a similar metre and has two lines of dhattā metre at the end. Vide Hemcandra Chandomuśāsana VI. Pajjadiā found in Bhavisayattakahū, and Duha, Cupai, Savaiya Harigīta, Zulaṇā, and Chhapā which are found in Old Gujarātī, belong to this class.

Gītagovinda has one prabandha in deśī (Canto v). Old Gujarātī rāsās and ākhyānas are made up kaṭavāns, garabīs and padas in deśī frequently interspersed with other kinds of metres. Among the popular deśī metres in Gujarātī are Parbhātians, Pada, Gīta, Garabo, Garabī, Māsa, Āratī, etc.

Padas are songs or short poems in deśī. Garabī generally means any composition which can be sung to the accompaniment of a garabo, the dance. The use of the word is popular and accurate. Songs or padas of this nature from the ākhyānas have been called garabīs; and the gāgaria bhaṭa is known as garabī bhaṭa on account of his singing such garabīs. A lengthy and descriptive garabī is called a garabo e.g. कलिकालनो गरबो

Deśī metres could be sung to melodies (राग) which are also known as deśī. According to the Saṅgīta ratnākara of Śārṅgadeva (13th century), deśī is the music, singing and dancing which is pleasing to the tastes of people in different countries. The different varieties of the melodies are named, each from the country in which it originated, e.g. Māru from Māravada, Goḍī from Gauḍa, Varādī from Berar, Gujjarī from Gujarāta, Soraṭha from Saurāshṭra.

Modern experiments in acquiring beauty and freedom for poetry are made on the following lines:

I Classical metres are preferred to deśī metres.

II (1) Composite metres are also formed of lines taken from different metres, e. g., Upajāti-vasantatilakā (2-2) or Śālini-mandākrānta (3-1).

(2) A line of the classical metre is broken up at the caesura, and each fragment is treated as a line. The stanza contains even one or more full lines; it also runs, into more than four lines, e. g., Khaṇḍa-Śikharīṇī, Khaṇḍa-harigīta. Very charming metres have been thus produced,

(3) A mātra or two are omitted at definite places in a line of classical metre to form a fresh variety, e. g., नयन उघडयुं पेलुं ओजखि नवल प्रभातनुं (Nanlal). Here नो is omitted.

III. Gazals are freely used.

IV. Attempts are made to evolve blank verse.

(1) The limitation of rhyme, stanza and quantity are abandoned; and the lines are regulated by sandhis of varying sizes, prose order being rarely broken. Instances are found in Rāmachanda devised by Manharrram Mehta, and Vanaveli by D.B. Keshavlal Dhruva.

(2) Prose is sought to be made rhythmic by re-arranging the prose order and giving it a cadence as of impassioned prose or sing-song chanting. Narmad attempted it in Rājyāranga; and Nanlal has considerably improved upon it.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ENGLISH

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---|
| Altekar, | Important Towns and Cities of Gujarat and Kathiawar. (1926.) |
| Bhimbbhai Kirparam, | Gujarat Population , Bombay Gazetteer, Vol IX. (1901) |
| Cambell, | History of Gujarat , Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. I. (1896.) |
| Divatia, Narsinhrao B., | Gujarati Language and Literature , Philological Lectures I (1921); II (1932.) Gujarati Language and Literature , Vassonji Lectures. (1930.) |
| Forbes Kinloch, | Rasmala I and II. |
| Govardhanram Madhavram, Tripathi. | The Classical Poets of Gujarat. (1894.) |
| Govindbbhai Hathibhai, | Families of Gujerat. (1932.) |
| Grierson, Sir George, | Linguistic Survey of India Vol. IX. Pt. II; and Articles on Apabhraṃśa ; Gujarātī in the Encyclopædia Britannica |
| Majumdar M. R. | The Cultural History of Gujarat (upto 1818). An unpublished thesis in the Library of the University of Bombay. |

- Scott. H. R. Gujerati Poetry (1914.)
- Tessitori Notes on the Grammar of the Old Western Rajasthani. Ind. Ant. XLIII. (1914.)
- Jhaveri K. M. Milestones in Gujarati Literature (1914); Further Milestones in Gujarati Literature. (1921.)
- GUJARĀTĪ.
- Acharya Vallabhji. Gujarātī Bhāṣhāno Vaisāvatāra.
- Dalal, Chimanlal, Pracīna Gurjarakāvya-saṅgraha (G. O. S.).
- Desai, Mohanlal Dalichand, Jaina Gurjara Kavio, Vol. I and II.
- Derasari, Sūlhinā Sahityanun Digdarśana.
- Desai, Icharam Suryaram, (Ed) Kāvya Dohaṇa, Series.
- Divatia, Narsinhrao B. Manomukura.
- Jani, Ambalal, Catalogue of Mss. in the Forbes Sabha, Vol. I and II.
- Jhaveri, Jiwanchand Sakar-chand, Anandakāvya Mohodadhi, Series
- Jinavijaya Muni, Pracīna Gujarātī Gadyasandarbha.
- Kantavala Hargovandas, (Ed.) Pracīna Kāvya-mālā, Series.
- Majumdar M. R. Essays on Gujarātī Poets published in magazines.
- Munshi, Kanaialal, Ādivacano; Ketlāka Lekho I. and II; Thodānika Rasadarśano; Narsaiyo-Bhakta Harino; Narmad-Aravacinimānī Ādya; (Ed.) Madhyayugano Sāhitya-pravāha.
- Nanalal Dalpatram, Sāhitya Manthana; Sansāra Manthana.
- Narmadāshankar Lalshankar, Gujaratiṇī Sthiti; Narmagadya.
- Navalram Lakshmiram, Navalagranthāvali Vol. I.
- Parekh, Hiralal T. (Ed.) Grantha ane Granthakūra, Vol. I—IV; (Ed.) Gujarat Vernacular Society's Itihāsa Vol. I—III

Parikha, Rasiklal Chhotalal, (Ed.)	Purātatva Series
Ramanbhai Nilakantha, Sir	Kavitāne Sāhitya , Vol. I—IV.
Ramnarayan Pathak,	Aroācina Gujarātī Kavitā
Raval, Shaukarlal C.	Gujarātī Sāhityanā Pravāsio (part published)
Sahityaparishad,	Reports, Series
Shastri, Durgashanker K.	Vaishṇava Dharmāno Itihāsa ; Gujarātānā Tīrthastāno ; Essays published in magazines.
Shastri, Vrajlal Kalidas,	Gujarātī Bhāshāno Itihāsa
Taraporevala I. J. S. (Ed.)	Selections from Classical Gujarātī Poets.
Thakore, Balvantraī	Kavitāpraveśa ; Āpāṇ Kavitā Samrddhi

INDEX

- Abhidhānacintāmaṇi*, 40, 41.
Abhimanyu-ākhyāna, 189, 191.
Abhinayakalā, 266.
 Ābhīra, 17, 21, 48, 87.
 Aborigines, 10.
 Ābu, Mt. 2, 16, 27, 49, 66, 78, 165.
Aḍadhe Raste, 326.
Ādivancano, 326, 339.
 Advaita philosophy, 180.
 Africa, 75, 307, 308, 317.
 Ahimsā, xv, xix, xx, 15, 40, 317, 318.
 Ahmedabad, 84, 112, 164, 174, 178, 179, 203, 208, 209, 230, 231, 234, 235, 249, 251, 252, 306, 307, 308, 371, 373, 374.
 Ahmed Shah, 84, 112.
 Ahmedshāh Abdali, 208.
Aitareya Brāhmana, 126.
Ajñānīlā-ākhyāna, 220.
 Ajayapāla, 44, 62, 65, 67.
Ājñānikīta, 326, 338.
 Akbar, 3, 113, 172, 173.
Akhegītā, 180, 183, 184.
 Akho or Akhā, xx, 178, 185, 207, 212, 220, 245, 246, 299, 375.
 Akhyāna, 117, 119, 123, 143, 187, 188, 190, 214, 220, 299.
 Alafkhān, 103, 104, 105.
Alaṁkāramahodadhī, 71.
Alaṁkātrapraveśa, 239.
 Allāuddīn, Sultan, 66, 83, 103, 105, 106, 107, 108, 346.
Alpātmaṇi Ātmapurāṇa, 362.
 Altekar, 383.
 Amaracandra, 73.
Amārā Rāha, 280.
Amaruśataka, 292.
 Ambā, goddess, 165, 249.
 Amrita Keshav Naik, 304.
 Ānandadhara, 153.
 Ānandodaya, 156.
 Anandshanker Dhruva, xx, 291.
 Ānartta, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 26, 74.
 Ānarttapura, 16.
 Anāvils, caste, xi
Andherī Nagarīno Gardhava-sena, 249.
Āndhī, 368.
Anekārthasaṁgraha, 40, 41.
Angadavishṭi, 203.
Anubhavabindu, 180, 183.
Anubhavavinānā, 355.
Anubhavikā, 282.
 Anūpadeśa, 2, 11, 13, 14.
 Anupamādevī, xviii.
Anuyogadvāra, 23.
 Apabhraṁśa, 17, 19, 21, 31, 34, 42, 43, 48, 49, 56, 59, 64, 79, 85, 86, 88, 89, 97, 101, 150, 163, 292.
 Aparānta, see Koṅkaṇa.
Arabian Nights, The, 49, 150.
 Arabic, 209, 240, 241.
 Arabs, 210, 211.
Ārāḍhanā, 86.
 Aravalli, viii,
Arda-vīrāf-nāmeḥ, 211.
Ardhaśatābdinā Bebolo, 293.
 Arisinha, 71.
 Aristophanes, 236.
 Arporāja, 65.

- Arogya Viśe Sāmānya Jñāna*, 312.
Arthasāstra, 32.
Arunanuj Adbhūta Svapna 349.
 Āryan Culture, x, xiv, xv, xvii, xix, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 113, 128, 146, 148, 244, 245, 251, 252, 264, 317, 321, 322, 378.
 Āryans, vii 4, 10, 11, 14, 16, 19, 28, 40, 41, 75, 79, 87, 114, 147, 177, 230, 265, 299, 321, 325, 375, 379.
 Ārya Samāja, xii, xiv, 252.
 Āryāvarta, 11, 15, 28, 29, 32.
Asādhūraṇa Anubhava, ane Bijī Vāto 362.
 Asoka, Emperor, 13, 16, 20, 300.
Aśrumatī, 304.
Aśtāvakraśāstrīyāna, 188, 197.
Astodaya, 240.
Ātmakathā, 312, 315.
Ātmanimajjana, 264.
 Audicyas, caste, xi.
Auj ane Agar, 292, 298.
 Aurangzib, 173, 207, 210, 232.
Avasāna, 353.
Avāśeśa, 344.
Avibhaktātma, 325, 336.
 Bāgalāṇa, 112, 173.
 Bahādūr Shah, xiii, 112, 113.
 Bahmana Kaikobad, 211.
 Balabhadra, 71.
Bālābhāratakāvya, 73.
 Bālāji Bājirao, 208.
Bālālūā, 143.
 Bāla Mūlarāja, 65, 210.
 Balashankar Ullasram, 265.
Bālāsikshā, 86.
Bālāvilāsa, 264.
Balidāna, n. 373.
 Balvantrai Thakore, 288-291.
 Bāṇa, 30, 33, 35, 38, 68, 73, 87, 119, 120, 256, 257.
Bārāsakasturīnī Vārtā, 203.
 Bardoli, xviii, 309, 311.
Bardoli Satyāgraha, xviii, 370.
 Barnes, Archdeacon, 232.
 Baroda, x, 4, 76, 124, 186, 187, 208, 212, 213, 218, 230, 252, 371.
Batrīśapullī, 203.
 Batubhai Umarvadia, 357.
 Bedi, port, ix.
Be Ghadi Mauj, 374.
 Behramji Malabari, 282.
 Behram Lakhmidhar, 211.
Be Kharāba Jape, 326, 337.
 Benares, 16.
 Bengal, 17, 49, 128, 129, 252, 264, 330.
 Bengālī, 293, 377.
Bhadrābhūminī, 162.
Bhadrāmbhadra, 281.
Bhagavadgītā, xix, 126, 188, 252, 292.
 Bhagavandāsa Kavi, 209.
 Bhāgavata Dharma, 76, 113.
Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 122, 127, 142, 143, 188, 198, 202, 292, 300.
Bhagvān Kauṭilya, 325, 336.
Bhāgiyā Dādā, 346.
Bhajanikā, 283.
Bhaktamūla n. 225.
 Bhakti, xix, 114, 116, 125-149, 184, 217, 219, 246, 249, 323.
Bhaktiṣoṣaṇa, 220.
Bhaktiśāstra, 126.
Bhaktisūtra, 126.

- Bhālāṇa, 86, 102, 118, 124, 143, 150, 166, 169, 175, 375.
 Bhāmaha, 48, n. 60.
Bhaṇakāra, 288.
 Bhandarkar, D. R., n.28.
Bhāratano Tanukāra, 283.
Bharateśvarabāhubali rāsa, 85, 89.
 Bhāravi, 30, 68.
 Bhāsa, 292.
Bhaṭṭanu Bhoṇālun, 247.
 Bhattārka, Senāpati, 26, 27.
 Bhaṭṭi, 30.
 Bhavabhūti, 30, 292.
 Bhāva Bṛhaspati, 43.
Bhavātavi, 366.
Bhavisayattakahā, 49.
 Bhavnagar ix.
 Bhila, Bhilī, 2, 10.
 Bhīma, Cālukya king, 37, 65, 97, 164.
 Bhīma (poet), 174.
 Bhīma II, 65.
 Bhimbhai Kirparam, 383.
 Bhīnnamāla, 2, 27, 34, 36, 37, 39, 107.
 Bhogindrarao Divatia, 303.
 Bhojī, 48, n. 61, 97, 204.
Bhojakathā, 203.
 Bhojo Bhagata, 214, 224.
 Bholanath Sarabhai, 249.
 Bhr̥gu kaccha or tīrtha, see Broach.
 Bhr̥gu, 10, 11, 12, 16, 20.
Bhulano Bhoga ane Bicāro, 362.
Bhutnū Bhaḍkī, 362.
 Bilhaṇa, 68, 85, 156.
Bilhaṇakāvya, 156.
 Biography, 22, 31, 42, 67-70, 97, 247, 253, 293, 302, 326, 339, 351, 357, 371, 376.
 Bombay, ix, x, xiv, 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 20, 113, 230, 235, 237, 248, 251, 252, 254, 258, 281, 294, 303, 304, 305, 307, 309, 311, 328, 346, 353, 371, 373, 374.
Bombay Gazetteer, n.26, n.84, n.208, 383.
Bombay Samachar, 233, 373, 374.
 Bopadeva, 116, 124.
 Botadkar, Damodar, 366.
Brahmācaryāśrama, 326, 338.
Brahmatīlā, 180.
 Brahmānanda, 217, 220.
 Brāhmaṇas, xii xv, xvi, xx, 13, 15, 16, 17, 28, 29, 31, 32, 37, 39, 43, 68, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 84, 92, 94, 104, 108, 109, 111, 114, 115, 119, 123, 124, 128, 133, 134, 146, 151, 154, 155, 163, 165, 182, 186, 187, 197, 201, 202, 203, 219, 232, 235, 236, 245, 281, 321, 325, 332, 334, 346.
Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 113.
 Brahmo Samāja, 249.
Bṛhatkathā, 150.
Bṛhatkathāmañjarī, 150.
 British, xiv, 3, 5, 85, 113, 208, 230, 231, 232, 235, 237, 240, 251, 259, 307, 310, 364, 365.
 Broach, 5, 6, 27, 23, 38, 71, 173, 201, 208, 209, 211, 230, 231, 233, 325, 332, 333.
Buddhiprakāśa, 235, 306.
Buddhiśālino Akhāḍo, 353.
 Buddhism, 12, 13, 16, 26, 31, 77, 128.
Buddhivardhaka, 233.
 Buddhivardhaka Sabhā, 233, 235, 237, 240.

- Burns, Prof. De Lisle, ix. 282, 339, 363, 371, 372, 377.
Culikāpaiśāci, 43.
- Cābkhā*, 214.
Caitanya, 8, 135, 140.
Cakravāṭhamithuna, 273.
Cālukyās, 2, 3, 5, 28, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 48, 56, 65, 67, 76, 101, 164, 175, 210, 325.
Cambay, Khambhāta, 2, 5, 38, 69, 72, 84, 174, 207, 208, 210, 231.
Campbell, 383.
Cāmuṇḍa, 37.
Caṇḍidāsa, 8, 128.
Cāṇḍoda, 16, 217.
Candrahāsa, 304.
Candrahāsaśhlyāna, 187.
Caturavarṇya, xv, xvi
Caturvīṃśatīprabandha, 97.
Caurapañcāśika, 155.
Cetana, 349.
Chaitanyabala Majumdar, 349.
Chandomūśāsana, 40.
Chandravadan Mehta, 367.
Chhaganlal Pandya, 292.
Chodhras, 10.
Christianity, xvi
Chunilal Vardhaman Shah, 303.
Citradarśano, 292.
Cittavicārasamvāda, 180.
Civil Disobedience Movement vii,
Classical Poets of Gujarāta, The, 253.
Cohāṇas, 102, 103, 105, 110.
Congress, The Indian National, 252, 306, 307, 309, 310, 311, 325, 330, 374.
Corāśi Vaiṣṇavanui Dholā, 220.
Criticism, Literary, 247, 270, 281, 282, 339, 363, 371, 372, 377.
Culikāpaiśāci, 43.
- Dadabhai Naoroji, 233, 251, 252, 263.
Dahyabhai Derasari, 371, 384.
Dahyabhai Dholshaji, 156, 298, 304.
Dakṣiṇa Āfricānā Satyāgrahano Itihāsa, 312.
Dalpatkāvya, 236.
Dalpatram Dahyabhai Kavi, 234, 236, 241, 246, 248, 281, 282, 292, 293, 302, 359, 363.
Dāṇuṇa, ix
Dāṇulīlā, 143, 188.
Dāṇḍin, 33, 48, n. 60, 151.
Dāṇḍio, 235, 244.
Darśanikā, 283, 286.
Darśanigunī, 288.
Dāsakumāracarita, 261.
Dāśamalīlā, 220.
Dāśamaskandha, 122, 123, 143, 198.
Dāśarūpa, 44.
Dayārāma, 122, 200, 210, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 224, 225, 229, 253, 294, 375.
Dayārāmācaritra, 371.
Dayārāmāno Akṣaradeha, 253, 264.
Deccan, ix.
Deśabhaṣha, 19, 20.
Deśnūṁnamulīlā, 40.
Deśi Nāṭaka Samāja, 304.
Devacandra, 47.
Devārājavatsarājacupā, 164.
Devībhāgavata, 113.
Devīcandraguptam, 337.

- Devīdāsa, n. 225.
Dhananijaya, 44.
Dhanapāla, 35, 49, 68.
 Dhansukhlal Mehta, 362.
 Dharasena II of Valabhi, n. 60.
Dharmakathā-anuyoga, 22.
Dharmavicāra, 229, 241, 244, 263.
Dhātukośa, 236.
 Dhavala, 49.
 Dhiro, 212.
 Dhodias, 10.
Dhruvākhyāna, xix, 122, 188.
Dhruvaswaminīdevī, 325, 337.
 Dhūmaketu, 345-347.
Dhvanyāloka, 127.
 Dipakaba Desai, 349.
 Divālibāī, n. 225.
Divyacakshu, 358.
Dohūkośa, 49.
 Drama, 20, 44-47, 62, 63, 67, 70-72, 79, 199, 236, 248, 281, 282, 298-301, 304, 325, 326, 336-338, 349-350, 357, 373, 376.
Draupadīdarśana, 239.
Draupadīharaṇa, 188.
Draupadīsvayamvara, 73, 187.
Draupadīvastrāharaṇa, 203.
 Dublas, 10.
Duhśāsana-rudhīraṇanūkyāna, 200.
 Dumas, Alexander, 326.
 Durgaram Manchharam, 233, 234, 241.
Durvāsākhyāna, 122.
Dūtāṅgaḍam, 72.
Dvirefanī Vāto, 359.
Dvyūśraya, 39, 41, 67, 375.
 Dvarka, Dvārikā, 5, 12, 70, 133, 137, 139, 140, 191, 192, 230.
 East India Company, The, 6, 208, 231, 232, 249, 258, 259.
Eka Devīnī Vṛtānta, 272.
 Elphinstone Institution, The, 233, 237.
Eme Banā Ke, 304.
 England, 87, 237, 241, 253, 271, 307, 308, 309, 315, 334, 354, 366.
Englandno Itihāsa, 247.
 English Literature, The, 150, 211, 229, 233-7, 240-1, 250-3, 256-7, 260, 263, 266, 272, 294, 303-4, 307, 313, 323, 326, 366, 371, 377.
 Ernest Leuman, Dr. 24.
 Erwad Rustom Peshotan, 211.
 Essay, 241, 247, 264, 266, 270, 281, 302, 339, 376.
 Europe and its Literature, xv, 174, 261, 310, 315, 349, 363, 376.
Europeṇā Patro, 351.
Fāgu, 91.
 Fardunji Murzbanji, 233, 250.
Fatuhati Ālamgiri, 209.
 Feroze Mulla bin Kano, 211.
 Fiction, 22-5, 33-5, 49-53, 57-59, 92-7, 150-172, 201, 248-9, 254-264, 303-4, 326-36, 344-8.
 Firdausi, 211.
 Forbes, A. Kinlock, 36, 208, 234, 235, 383.
 Forbes Sabhā, 235.
Forbes Vilāsa, 236.
Forbes Viraha, 236.
 Framji, Bamanji, 249.
Further Milestones in Gujarati Literature, n.276, 371, 384.
Gadānigraha, 73.

- Gāekvāḍas, 207, 208, 225, 230, 305.
 Gagarīā Bhāṭa, 117-8, 124, 187.
 Gaṇapati, 218.
 Gandeṇī, x.
 Gandhi, Mahātmā, viii, xii, xv, xvi, xx, 1, 125, 146, 298, 307-323, 366, 373.
 Gaṇeśa Parāsūraḥ, 233.
 Gaṅgotrī, 370.
 Garabī, 122, 220-5, 293-7, 376, 382.
 Garabīsaingraha, 220.
 Gauribāī, n. 225.
 Gaurishankara Oza, n.27.
 Ghogha, 5, 6, 174, 208.
 Giradhara, n. 225.
 Giranāra Mt. 13, 20, 26, 69, 76, 116, 214.
 Girinagara, see Junāgaḍha.
 Gītāgovinda, 92, 116, 128, 144, 292.
 Gītamanjarī, 292.
 Goethe, 272, 316, 326.
 Gopāladāsa, 135.
 Gopikānū Gorasī, 294.
 Goswāmis, 134-6, 149, 179, 216, 218, 239.
 Govardhanram Tripathi, xvii, 249, 253, 257, 262, 263, 265, 266, 281, 302, 306, 371, 375, 383.
 Govinda gamana, 143.
 Govindasingh, Guru, 272.
 Govindbhai Hathiḥbhai, 383.
 Grāmya Mātā, 358, 359.
 Greeks, Greece, 13, 16, 126, 237.
 Grierson, Sir George, 11, n.19, n.99, 383.
 Gujarāta ane Kāthiāvāḍa Desha-nū Vato, 249.
 Gujarāta-Eka Sāṁskṛika Vyākṛti, 339.
 Gujarāta, extent, people, life and culture of, vii-xx 1-9, 18, 37, 41-2, 74-9, 83-4, n. 98, 112-4, 130, 135, 173-7, 186, 207-11, 225, 230-4, 238-9, 245-7, 249-50, 251-3, 307-11, 323, 334, 343, 362, 363-4, 366, 375-9.
 Gujarāta, monthly, 325, 349, 363, 372.
 Gujarātānī Ekātī, 306.
 Gujarātānī Junī Vārta, 303.
 Gujarātāno Nāthar, 325, 331-1.
 Gujarāta Vidyāpīṭha, 308, 374.
 Gujarātī Bhāṣhāno Itihāsa, 237.
 Gujarātī Grammar, 236.
 Gujarātī Language, origin and development of, vii, viii 1, 2, 31, 59, n.61, 85-6, 88, 89, 90, 98-100, 101, 102, 111, 116, 134, 148, 153, 160, 162, 163, 240, 249, 257, 265, 270, 276, 282, 293, 298, 300, 312, 315, 320, 340, 344, 350, 375-7.
 Gujarātī Language and Literature, (Vassonji Lectures) n. 149, n. 256, 266, 383.
 Gujarātī Language and Literature, (Wilson Phi. lectures) n. 99, n. 100, 266, 383.
 Gujarātī Sāhitya, 371, 384.
 Gujarātī, Weekly, 305.
 Gujarat Vernacular Society, The, 235, 306, 371.
 Gulābsinh, 264.
 Guṇacandra, 44, 64.
 Guṇāḍhya, 45, 150.
 Guṇamati, 26,

- Guṇasamgraha*, 73.
 Guptas, Imperial, and their times,
 13, 18-9, 21-2, 26, 29, 113,
 126, 152, 337.
 Gurjarabhūmi, see Gujarāta.
 Gurjaras, 26, 28, n.28, 48, 85.
 Gurjaratrā, 2, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31.
Guruśishyasamvāda, 180.

 Haji Mahomed Shivji, 372.
Hamīrsinha Gohel, 280.
Hammāramadamardana, 71.
 Hansa Mehta, 349.
Hansāvalī, 162.
Haracaritra, 185.
Hūramūlā, 139, n. 149, 186, 188.
Harasamvāda, 119.
 Hargovandas Kantavala, 249,
 305, 384.
 Haribhadra, 23, 32, 34, 35.
 Haridāsa, n. 225.
 Harilal Dhruva, 265.
Harililāmṛta, 116, 124.
Harililāshodasakalā, 123.
Hariścandrākhyāna, 188.
Harivaiśa, n.10, 18, 19, 22,
 49, 113.
 Harsha, Emperor, 27, 29.
Hāsyamandira, 282, 348.
Hāsyavihāra, 362.
Hāthūnū Dānta, n. 373.
 Hemacandra, xx, 32, 37-47, 57, n.
 61, 62-68, 73, 75, 76, 78, 85.
 88, 97, 101.
 Hemaśrī, 165.
 Hieun Tshang, 26, 27, 28.
Himālayano Pravāsa, 319, 320.
 Hindi, n. 61, 153, 165, 180, 187,
 218, 220, 334.
Hindolānā Pado, 142.
Hinduonī Paḍatī, 242.
 Hindus and Hinduism, x, 107, 111,
 112, 113, 114, 115, 130, 165,
 175, 177, 207, 208, 209, 210,
 211, 212, 232, 236, 244, 250,
 252, 257, 258, 263, 264, 279,
 283, 291, 304, 310, 320, 321,
 322, 329, 331, 353, 364, 365.
Hindustān ane Prajāmitra, 373.
 Hiralal Parekh, 384.
 Hirānanda, 160.
Hiravijayasurirāsa, 172.
 History, 39, 42, 69, 97, 164,
 209-10, 241, 247, 302, 370-1,
 376.
 History, Literary, 237, 239, 371.
 Hobhouse, Prof., xiii.
Hṛdayanātha, 358.
Hṛdayatripuṭī, 276, 277.
Hṛdayaviṇā, 265, 266.
 Hugo, Victor, 326.
 Humour, 31, 169, 172, 198, 236,
 281-2, 337-9, 359-363.
Hunḍī, 186, 188.
Hunnarakhānanī Caḍāī, 236.
Hui, Sarala ane Mitrāmṇḍala,
 362.
 Icharam Suryaram, 303, 305, 384.
Ilākāvya, 367.
 India, 4, 19, 30, 34, 45, 74, 79,
 84, 111, 115, 126, 129, 130,
 150, 151, 152, 153, 174, 187,
 207, 208, 211, 232, 237, 240,
 245, 251, 252, 262, 271, 307,
 308, 310, 317, 319, 320, 325,
 327, 328, 330, 349, 363, 375,
 376, 377, 378, 379.

- Indirā*, 349.
 Indo-Aryan Languages, 11, n.19.
Indukumāra, 292, 299.
 Islam, 83, 210, 211, 364.
 Ismailia Sect, 210.
Īśvaraprārthanā Mālā, 249.

Jaina Gurjara Kavio, 371, 384.
 Jaina Sādhus, xix, 20, 21, 22, 31, 32, 34, 37, 38, 41, 43, 56, 63, 65, 71, 75, 78, 92, 97, 98, 171, 172.
 Jinas, Jainism, 6, 12, 16, 21, 25, 32-35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 49, 62, 64, 66, 69, 75, 77, 78, 89, 92, 96, 97, 102, 136, 151, 163, 165, 168, 172, 203, 305, 331, 371.
Jālandharīkhyāna, 122.
Jambusvāmīcarita, 85.
Jāme Janshed, 374.
 Jani, Ambalal, 384.
Janmabhūmi, 374.
 Janmashankar Buch, see Lalita.
Jasodāno Jīvanavikāsa, 353.
Jātakas, 5, 150.
 Jayadeva, 116, 128.
Jayājyanta, 292, 298, 299.
Jayakumari, 248.
 Jayasinha, poet, 71, 72, 98.
Jehangir-Nurjehan, 292, 300.
 Jehangir Talayarkhan, 249.
 Jhālora, 34, 65, 102, 103, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 152, 156, 157, 208, 346.
Jhānjavānā Jala, 352.
 Jhaveri, D. B. Krishnalal, n.209, n.211, n.276, 371, 384.
 Jhaveri, Jiwanchand, 384.
 Jinabansa, 98.
 Jinamaṇḍana, 98.
 Jinavijaya Muni, n. 35, 384.
Jindagīnū Navāne, 369.
Jīvanamānthī Jadeli, 349.
Jīvanano Ullāsa, 339.
Jūnā Kakkā, 212.
Jūnāśudhā, 306.
Joḍaṇī Kośa, 374.
 Jonathan Duncan, 211.
 Journalism, 233, 235, 239, 305-6, 313, 372, 373-4.
 Junāgaḷha, x, 11, 13, 112, 136, 137, 138, 140, 156, 157, 207, 252, 332, 333.
Jyāre Suryodaya Thashe, 349.
 Jyotindra Dave, 362.
 Jyotsna Shukla, 349.

 Kabīra, 115.
 Kaccha, viii, ix, 1, 2, 3, 6, 8, 9, 13, 14, 36, 37, 74, 113, 230, 231, 365.
Kādamburī, (O. G.) 120-2, 375.
Kādamburī, (Sam.) 38, 73, 92, 119, 292.
 Kabandas Medu, 365.
 Kāhṇa Bhatta, 128.
Kaiser-i-Hind, 373.
Kaivalyagītā, 180.
Kūkānū Shashi, 326, 338.
 Kakkal, 43.
 Kalāpī, 275-80.
Kalāpīnū Patro, 275, 280.
Kalāpīno Kekāraṇa, 275, 276.
 Kalelkar, Kaka, 319, 323.
Kalelkarnū Lekho, 319.
 Kālidāsa, 18, 67, 79.
 Kālidāsa, Gujarāṭī Poet, n. 225.

- Kalikā*, 283, 286.
Kalimahātmya, 203.
Kallolinī, 366.
Kāmakuṇḍalā Nūṭaka 153-5.
Kamalanū Patro, 357.
Kāmasūtra, 32.
Kāmāvati, 162.
 Kanaiyalal Munshi, n. 11, n. 125,
 n. 134, n. 136, n. 149, n. 186,
 n. 189 n. 239, n. 245, n. 246,
 n. 250, 324-43, 371, n. 372,
 384.
Kanakāvati, 165.
Kānhaḍadeprabandha, n. 100,
 102-11, 196, 375.
Kāntā, 264.
 Kantilal Pandya, 371.
 Kanuben Dave, 349.
 Karachi, ix.
Karaṇa Ghelo, 103, 248-9, 303.
Karmavipāka Saṅgraha, 3.
Karṇa, 37, 66.
Karṇuramañjarī, 153.
 Karsondas Mulji, 233.
Karsondas Muljinui Caritra,
 371.
Kāshmirānī Diary, 350, 351.
Kashunīrno Pravāsa, 275, 280.
Kāśī, 22, 84, 179, 201, 218.
 Kasturba Gandhi, xix.
Kathūsaritasāgara, 150.
Kathāvāḍa, Saurāshṭra, x, xiv,
 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12,
 13, 14, 16, 20, 23, 36, 37, 48,
 66, 74, 87, 104, 133, 209, 214,
 216, 230, 231, 236, 254, 260,
 275, 294, 363, 365, 366.
Kaumudī, 372.
Kaumudinilrāṇandaṁ, 45-7.
Kavītāne Sūhitya, 281, 282.
Kāvyaūdarśa, n. 60.
Kāvya Dohana, 305, 384.
Kavyūlaṁkāra, I and II n. 60-61.
Kāvyaṁangalā, 368.
Kāvyaṁimāṁsā, n. 60.
Kāvyaṁuśāsana, 43, 44, 76, 85
Kāvyaṁprakāśa, 43.
Kāvyaṁrasikā, 283.
 Kayam-din Pīr, 211.
 Keith, Dr. xx, 18, n. 19, 43.
Kera Kāṇṭo, 175.
 Keśava Hṛderāma, 123.
 Keśavānanda, 217.
 Keshavlal Dhruva, D. B. n. 98,
 292. n. 331.
 Keshav Sheth, 366.
Kettāka Lekho, n. 245, 326, 339,
 384.
Kettāṅka Kāvya, 292.
 Khabardar, Ardeshir Framji,
 vii, xvii 283-7.
 Khambhāta, see Cambay.
Khanda-kāvya, 349.
Khāparācorarāsa, 153.
 Khedāwals, caste, xi.
Khemī, 360-2.
 Khojas, 211.
Kīrttikaumudī, 67-9, 71, 72, 77.
Kissa-e-Sanjāna, 211.
Klānta Kavi, 265.
Kodiyānī, 369.
Kokilā, 358.
 Koṅkaṇa, 13, 38, 42, 74, 112.
Kono Vāṅka, 325, 329-30.
 Krishnalal Shridharani, 369.
Kṛṣṇābāi, n. 225.
Kṛṣṇa-bāla-carita, 122.
Kṛṣṇadāsa, 186.
Kṛṣṇajanma, 143.
Kṛṣṇa, Śrī, 1, 12, 71, 76, 77, 87,

88, 116, 122, 125, 131, 135,
148, 186, 189, 191-3, 197, 198,
216-9, 221, 239, 248, 294,
297, 321.

Kṛṣṇavishī, 122, 200.

Kshatriyas, xii, 16, 75, 277.

Kshemankara, 152.

Kshemendra, 45, 150.

Kshtrapas, Western, 13, 16-7.

Kulamaṇḍana, 86.

Kulina ane Mudrā, 249.

Kūmāradevī, 349, 351.

Kumāra, monthly, 372.

Kumarapāla, xiii, xx, 37, 40-4,
62-5, 67, 79, 97, 163, 172.

Kunārāpālacarita, 41, 42, 98.

Kunārāpāla prabandha, 98.

Kunārāpāla pratibodha 56, 64.

Kunbis caste x, xi.

Kunjavihāra, 265.

Kuntīprasannākhyāna, 200.

Kuruksheṭra, 293.

Kuśalalābha, 154, 156.

Kuśasthali, see Dwarkā.

Kusumamālā, 265, 266.

Kusumśrīrāsa, 169.

Kuvalayamālā, 8, 27, 34.

Lagane Lagane Kuivārūlāla,
353.

Lajpatrai, Lala, 252, 330.

Lakshmaṇagaṇi, 88.

Lakshmaṇāharaṇa, 188.

Lakuleśa, 76.

Lalita, 280, 303.

Lalitādevī, 66.

Lalitādukkhadarśaka, 248.

Lalitanān Kavyo, 303.

Lankākāṇḍa, 202,

Lāṭa, 2, 3, 8, n. 20, 30, 31, 36, 38,
69, 72, 74, 332.

Lavaṇaprasāda, 65-9,

Lāvanyasamaya, 164-5.

Līlāvati Jīvanakālī, 253.

Lilavati Munshi, n. 134, 325,
349-56.

Lokamūtā, 319.

Lomaharshīṇ, 357.

Longmans, Green & Co. Messrs.,
xx.

Loṇāmudrā, 325.

Lytton, Lord, 256, 264.

Macaulay, Lord, 232.

Madāhatsūkhyāna, 188.

Madanāmohanī, 156, 203.

Madana Purāṇa, 154.

Mādhavakūṭamukundalārāsa, 154.

Madhavānula, 154.

Mādhavānula-dogdhaka-prabandha, 153.

Madhava Rao, Sir T., 230.

Madhavendrapuri, 129.

Maḍhulī, 303.

Madhusudana Vyāsa, 152.

Madhva, 77.

Madyadeśa, Midland, ix 11, 12,
16, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Māgadhi, 43.

Māgha, 68, 73, 79, 256.

Māhābhārata, 12, 16, 18, 30, 32,
41, 45, 70, 73, 113, 122, 124,
187, 188, 195, 260, 292.

Mahadeva Desai, 370.

Mahamud Ghazni, 37.

Mahamud Shah Alamgir, 209.

Māhāpurushacaritam, 43.

Mahārāshṭra, x, 17, 93, 128, 254,
264, 378,

- Iahāvira, 21, 29, 31, 41.
 Iahipatram Ruparam, 233, 234, 248, 249, 281, 371.
 Iahī, river, 7, 201, 212.
 Iāhishmatī, 5, 11, n. 11.
 Iahmud Ghorī, 65.
 Iahmud Shah II, 83.
 Iahomed Begda, 112.
 Iaitrakas, 26.
 Iajumdar, M. R., n. 153, 383, 384.
Iālā ane Mudrikā, 275.
 Ialabari, Behramji, 282.
Iālūdevī ane Bijū Nātako, 357.
Iālātī, 353.
Iālātūnādhava, 292.
 Malayacandra, 152.
 Mallikārjuna, King of Koṅkaṇa, 42.
Mallināthamahākāvya, 160.
 Mālvā, Mālvī, viii, 2, 11, 13, 17, 26.
Māmeruī, 188, 193.
 Mammata, 43.
Mānalilā, 143.
 Mānava Dharma Sabhā, 234.
Mānavatūnā Ārshadarśano, 339.
 Māndaṇa, 180.
Mandhūtākhyāna, 188, 189.
 Mangalamāṇeka, 153.
 Manibhai Jasbhai, 230.
 Māṇikyacandra, 93, 169.
 Manilal Chhabaram Bhatt, 303.
 Manilal Dvivedi, 253, 264, 276, 281, 291, 305, 306.
 Manishankar Bhatta, Kānta, 271, 272-6, 300.
 Manjukesānanda, n. 225.
 Manoharswāmī, 209.
Manomukura, 266, 270, Mansukh, 250.
 Mansukhlal Jhaveri, 370.
 Mansukhram Tripathi, 240, 245, 247, 253, 256, 281, 302.
 Mantri Karmaṇa, 123.
Manusmṛti 17, 18, 41.
 Marāthās, Marāṭhī, n. 61, 153, 173, 187, 207, 208, 209, 234, 293, 334, 349.
 Māravāḍa, Marwar, Maru, Mār-wāris, 1, 13, 72, 78, 102, 156, 166, 173, 378.
 Marco Polo, n. 98.
Māri Hāḱikata, n. 238, 239.
Māri Kamalā ane Biji Vāto, 326, 339.
Māri Nondhapothī, 362.
 Markandeya, 12.
Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 18, 19, 70, 120, 188, 375.
Māruḍholūcupātī 156, 174.
Māsahhūra Gāvaiyā, 346.
 Masta Fakir, 359.
 Mātāpantha, 211.
 Mathura, Śūrasena, 11, 12, 16, 20, 22, 78, 87, 129, 133, 218.
 Matisāra, 153.
Matsyagandhā and Gāngeya, 357.
Matsya Purāṇa, n10, 18, 19, 113.
 Matubhai Kantavala, 372.
 Meadows Taylor, 249.
 Medical Works, 73.
Meghadūta, 292, 369.
 Mehta, Sir Pheroza, 251, 252, 307, 330.
 Menander, 13.
 Merutuṅga, 57, 71, 97, 164.
Milestones of Gujarātī Literature, 371.
 Mīnaḷadevi, xviii.

- Mirānbāi, xviii 130, 133, 211.
Mirat-i-Ahamadi, 171, 209.
Mirat-i Sikandari, 209.
Mitākshara, 174.
Mithiyā abhimāna, 236.
Mitradharmākhyāna, 200, 201.
 Modhera, 78.
 Moghul Emperors, xiii, 5, 113,
 130, 173, 174, 186, 187, 209,
 232, 300.
 Mohanlal Dalichand Desai, 371,
 384.
 Mohankul Ranchhodas, 233, 234.
Moharājaparrājaya, 62-3.
 Morbī Nātak Samāja, 294, 304.
Mośālācaritra, 186.
Mṛcchakatika, 45.
Mrgūākhyāna, 119, 120.
Mudrā ane Kulina, 249.
Mudrārākshasa, 337.
Mugdhāvabodha, 86.
 Muktañanda, 217, n.225.
 Mukunda, n.225.
 Mūlarāja, 28, 36, 37, 67, 68, 74,
 77.
 Mumbāi Nāṭaka Samāja, 304.
Munjaṇprabandha, 57.
Muñjarūsa, 57, 375.
 Munshi, see Kanaiyalal Munshi.
Mūrkhakṣhaṇāvali, 202.
 Mussalmans, x, xii 74, 75, 78, 79,
 84, 85, 101-3 105, 107-12, 114,
 115, 129, 150, 177, 207-11,
 231, 364, 365.
 Mutiny, The, 237, 259.
 Muzafar Shah, see Zafar Khan.
 Nāgadamana, 143.
 Nāgara Brāhmaṇas, 37, 76, 84,
 136, 138, 146, 209, 217, 234,
 237, 253.
 Nahapuna, Kshatrap, 16.
 Naikadevi, 65.
Naishadhīya, 122.
 Nakara, 124, 188.
Nalacampū 122.
Naladarmayanī, 166.
Naladarmayanīrāsa, 168, 171.
Nalākhyāna, by Bhalaga, 122.
Nalākhyāna, by Premarūn, 188,
 194-5.
Nala-vilāsa, 45.
Nalāyana, 168.
 Nandabhai Haridas, 234.
 Nanaka, Guru, 115.
 Nanul Kavi, vii, xvii, 266, 275,
 292-303, 375, 384.
Nanā Rāsa, 292.
Nanā Batriśī, 203.
 Nandalala Munshi, 209.
Nandisūtra, 32.
Nandshankar Jīvanā Caritra, 371.
 Nandshankar Tuljashankar, 248.
Naracandra, 68.
 Naraharidāsa, 115.
Naranārāyaṇmāṇḍa, 70.
Naratsaiyo-Bhakti Harino, n.136,
 n.149, n.186, 326, 339.
 Narasinha Mehtā, n. 98, 125, 130
 136-49, 178, 184, 186, 188
 193, 217, 246, 286, 304, 326,
 371, 375.
Narasinh Mehtānī Hunda, 192,
 220.
Narihrdaya, 275.
 Narmāda, River, 2, 10, 11, 12, 16,
 18, 28, 202, 217, 230.
Narmad-Arvācinomāñi Ādya
 326.

- Narmadashankar, Narmad, xvii,
 225, 235, 237-47, 263, 264,
 265, 305, 371, 375, 384.
Narmagadya, 239.
Narmakathākośa, 239.
Narmakavīta, 239.
Narmakośa, 239.
 Narsinhrao Divatia, vii n. 98, n.
 99, n. 100, 149, 200, 253, 265-
 71, 276, 282, 375, 383, 384.
 Nāsika, ix.
 Naṭarshi, 91.
 Native Education Society, The,
 233.
Nātyadarpana, 44.
Navacetana, 372.
Navajīvana, 308, 312, 313, 320,
 373.
Navagraṇthāvali, 247.
Navalajīvana, 253.
 Navalram Laxmiram, 247, 253,
 281, 384.
Navatatvabliṣṭhya, 88.
 Nayasundara, 165, 168, 169.
Nayikā-vishaya praveśa, 239.
 Nemicaṇḍra, 24.
Nemināthacatuspadikā, 85, 89.
 Nemisādhū, 48, n. 61.
Nighaṇṭuśeṣa, 40, 73.
 Nilakaṇṭha, 68.
 Nimbārka, 77, 128.
 Nirānta Bhagata, 213.
Nirzariyū, 366.
 Nishkulānanda, n. 225.
Nitibhaktinā pado, 220.
 Nṛsinhāraṇyamuni, 116.
Nūpura Jhankāra, 265, 266.
 Nur-ud-din Satagar, 210.
 Okha, port, ix.
 Olyā Joshi, 359.
Oriental Memoirs, 208.
 Oriental Research Department,
 (Gaekwad's), 371.
 Ośvālas, 39, 74, 77, 164.
Oṭrāṭi Divālo, 319, 320, 321.
 Ovington Padre, 174.
Paḍachūyū, 344.
 Pādalipta, 23, 24.
 Padmanābha, n. 98, n. 100, 101,
 102.
 Padmāvatī, 203.
Padmini, 303.
Padyaracanāno Itihāsa, 292.
 Paśāci, 43, 150.
 Palamkot, Sohrab, 283.
 Pālītāpa, 23.
Pañcadaśīātṭhāparya, 180.
Pañcākhyāna, 65.
Pāñcālī-prasannākhyaṇā, 199.
Pāñca Patro, 355.
 Pañcarātra, 126.
Pañcatantra, 65, 150, 152.
Pañcikaraṇa, 180.
 Paṇini, 126.
Pāṇipata, 249.
Paramapadaṇṭhapṛāpti, 180.
 Paraśurāma, Bhārgava, 11, 70.
Parikramaṇabālāvabodha, 92.
Parīśiṣṭaparvan, 41, 43.
 Parsi authors, 211, 282, 283.
 Parsi, Gujarāṭi, 250.
 Parsis, xii, 211, 212, 233, 248, 250,
 282, 283, 304, 305, 373, 374.
Pārthaparākrama, 70.
 Pāsupata Cult, 76, 77, 78.
 Pāṭana, x, 2, 27, 28, 36, 37, 39, 41,

- 43, 56, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68,
74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 83, 86, 101,
103, 106, 112, 119, 123, 156,
157, 164, 165, 305, 331, 332.
Pāṭaṇanī Prabhūtā, 325, 331.
Paṭidaras, xi 204, 213, 214.
Patro, 312.
Pattani, Sir Prabhāshankar, 231.
Pauma Cariyam, 22, 32.
Pehlvi, 150.
Periplus, 17.
Persian Language, 203, 209, 210,
211, 240, 250, 264, 276, 283,
293.
Persian Poets, 187, 265.
Pingalapraśāsa, 239.
Pirāṇāpantha, 211.
Porabandar, ix.
Porvādas, 74, 77, 164.
Prabandhacintāmaṇi, 57, 97, 334.
Prabandhakoś, 44.
Prabhācandra, 97.
Prabhāsa, 11, 12, 16, 69, 104.
Prabhūtano Tapasvī, 283.
Prabhāvahacaritra, 97.
Prabhāvātīrāsa, 166.
Prācīna-kāvya-mālā, 305.
Prakūśika, 283.
Prākṛtas, 19, 20, 21, 31, 32, 33,
35, 39, 41, 42, 48, 56, 64, 86,
87, 89, n. 98, 150, 152, 163,
165, 292.
Prākṛtasarvasva, n. 98.
Prahlādāṅkhyāna, n. 225.
Prahlādāna, 68, 70, 75, 79.
Praṇālikāvāda, 339.
Prānāl Munshi, n. 373.
Prārthanā Samāja, 249.
Prasthāna, 359, 372.
Pratikramanabālāvabodha, 86.
Pratiśāṅkhyas, 37.
Premakunja, 299.
Premānanda, xix, n. 98, 99, 100,
118, 120, 123, 140, 143, 162,
169, 177, 186, 187, 188, 209,
217, n. 225, 270, 375.
Premānandakathā, 200.
Premānandanā Nātako, 200, 266.
Premānanda Sakhi, 217.
Prītamadāsa, 215.
Prthvīcandracarita, 93-7.
Prthvīrāja and Chand, 303.
Prthvīśa, 344.
Prthvīvallabha, 325, 334.
Ptolemy, 5.
Purāṇas, and their Influence, xix, 4,
10, 11, 18, 32, 79, 94, 113, 114,
116, 117, 119, 125, 127, 143,
150, 154, 163, 166, 177, 187,
189, 190, 192, 201, 203, 220,
244, 245, 248, 261, 264, 292,
300, 302, 304, 312, 320, 325,
336, 373, 376.
Purandaraparājaya, 325, 326.
Purātatva, 372.
Purābhadrā, 65, 152.
Purshottam Tricundas, 373.
Pūrvālāpa, 272.
Pūrvāraṅga, 319.
Pushkaratīrtha, 157.
Pushtimārga, 134, see Vallabha.
Pustaka Prasāraka Mandali, 234.
Putrasamovāṇi, 325, 337.
Rādhā, 77, 87, 88, 116, 126, 128,
129, 137, 140, 143, 144, 145,
202, 219, 221, 294, 300.
Rādhābāi, n. 225.
Rādhakṛishṇanā Mahinā, 202.

- Raidāsa, 115.
Rāino Parvat, 281, 282.
Rājādhirāja, 325, 332.
Rāja Mugata, 344.
Rājarshi Bharata, 292, 299.
Rājasekhara, 30, 48, n.60, 97, n.98.
Rajputs, xi, 75, 83, 102, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 111, 131, 210, 258, 332, 346, 347, 364.
Rajputānā, Rājasthāna, viii, xiv, 17, 27, 74, 78, 86, 102, 107, 130, 133, 134, 156, 208, 230, 378.
Rājyaranga, 241.
Rakhūdāsa caritra, 203, 204.
Rāma, 3, 70, 106, 115, 119, 196, 197, 260, 275, 321, 379.
Rāmabālacarita, 122.
Rāmacandra, 44-7, 62, 72.
Ramacaraṇa, 187.
Rāmacaritamānasa, 115.
Rāmānanda, 115, 116, 119, 216.
Ramanbhai Nilkantha, Sir, 281, 306, 348, 359.
Ramanlal Desai, 358-9.
Ramanlal Vakil, 370.
Rāmānuja, 77, 115, 127.
Rūmaśataka, 67.
Rūmaviraha, 122.
Rāmāyaṇa, 22, 30, 32, 70, 109, 115, 119, 122, 124, 152, 164, 188, n. 225, 292.
Ramchandra Shukla, 368.
Ramkrishṇa Paramhansa, 252.
Ramnarayan Pathak, 359.
Raṇachhoḍaji Divān, 209.
Raṇachhoḍanā Sloka, 203.
Raṇamallachanda, 101.
Raṇastambha, 203.
Raṇayajna, 188, 196.
Ranchhodbhai Girdharbhai, 233, 234, 240, 246.
Ranchhodbhai Udayaram, 248, 291, 304.
Rangasāgara Nemifāga, 89.
Rangataranga, 362.
Ranina, Nanabhai, 233.
Ranjitram Vavabhai, 306.
Rāsa candrikā, 283.
Rāsamālā, 36, 235.
Rāsapañcadhyāyī, 220.
Rasapraveśa, 239.
Rāsasahasrapadī, 142.
Rāsataranginī, 366.
Rashtrakūṭas, 28.
Rasikavallabha, 220.
Ratanbāi, 211.
Ratnalaxmi, 249.
Ratneśvara, 187, 202.
Rāvaṇamandodarīsamvāda, 164, 203.
Rāvaṇavadha, 30, 375.
Rekhācitro ane Bijā Lekho, 349, 357.
Revākhaṇḍa, 203.
Revantagirirāsa, 85.
ṚgVeda, 5, 20, 126, 325.
Riponviraha, 243.
Roman Swarājya, 272.
Romanticism, 229, 249, 251, 256, 257, 261, 376.
Roshadarśikā-satyabhāmākhyāna, 188, 199.
Rousseau, 310, 376.
Ṛshabhadāsa, 172.
Ṛshyaśrngākhyāna, 187, 190.
Ṛtu Varṇana, 241, 246.
Rudradāman I, 13.
Rudraṭa, 48, n. 60.

- Rukāt-e-Gunagun*, 210.
Rukmīṇīharaṇa, 122, 188, n. 225.
Rupacandrakūṇivararāsa, 165-7, 175.
Rustambahādurno Pavādo or Abhrāmakulīna-śloko, 203.

Sadayvatsa-sāvalingā, 162.
Sadhrū Jesang, 248.
Sāgaracandra, 44.
Sahajīā sect, 128, 135.
Sāhitya Manthana, 293.
Sāhitya, Monthly, 372.
Sāhitya Parishad and its Reports, n. 73, n. 99, n. 200, 371.
Sāhitya Sansad, 326, 372.
Sahya Ghāts, viii, ix.
Saint Francis, 371.
Saivalinī, 366.
Śaivism, 26, 40, 76, 136.
Śāksharaṇvāna, 253.
Śakti, Weekly, 306.
Śākuntala, 126, 292, 299, 321.
Salaiyāḥhyāna, 214.
Sāmaḷa Bhaṭa, 152, 154, 156, 160, 162, 177, 200, 201, 203, 204, 205, 209.
Sāmāratnamāla, 203.
Sāmalaśūno Vivāha, 140.
Samālocaka, 306.
Samarāicā-kahā, 33, 34, 375.
Samararāsa, n. 98.
Samayasundara, 171.
Śambarakanyā, 325.
Samgītaratnākara, 87.
Samsāralālā, 372.
Samsāramanthana, 293.
Samsārikā, 282.
Saṁskṛta and its influence, x, xiv, xix, 4, 13, 15, 17-21, 29-35 37, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 56, 64, 78, 79, 84, 86, 87, 89, 92, 97, n. 98, 115-118, 120, 128, 150, 151, 153, 155, 160, 163-166, 168, 169, 170, 180, 187, 188, 202, 203, 209, 211, 212, 218, 220, 239, 240, 241, 245, 247, 251, 252, 253, 256, 257, 260, 264, 265, 266, 271, 272, 273, 282, 283, 291, 293, 300, 302, 320, 332, 334, 337, 372, 376.
Sandeshikā, 283.
Saṅghādhipati, 72.
Saṅghamitrā, 292, 300.
Sānj Vartmān, 374.
Saṅkarācārya, 8, 77, 178, 179, 300.
Saṅkīta Hṛdaya, 358.
Sānyukta, 358.
Saptakṣhetrirāsa, 88.
Saptamaskandha, 188.
Saptasatī, 120, 124.
Śārada, monthly, 372.
Śārasaṅgīta, 215.
Sarasvatīchandra, xix, 249, 253, 254-64, 266, 288, 303.
Sarasvatīkaṇṭhābharaṇa, n. 61.
Śaṅgadhara, 87.
Sastu-sāhitya Kāryalaya, 374.
Sātapuḍās, viii, ix.
Satasaiyā, 220.
Saṭhī-na-Sāhityamu Digdarśana, 371.
Satyabhāmūkhyāna, 220.
Satyabhāmavivāha, 122.
Satyāgraha, xv, xvi, xviii, 309, 318, 358.
Saurāshṭra, Weekly, 373.

- Saurāshṭranī Rasadhūtā*, 364.
 Sayajirao, H. H., Sir, 230.
 Scott, H. R., 384.
 Scott, Sir Walter, 237, 248, 256.
 326.
Śeshākhyānamālā, 40.
Shadrītuvarṇana, 220.
 Shahabu-ud-din Ghorī, 210.
Shahanshah Akbar, 292.
Shah-nāmeh, 211.
 Shakespeare, 248.
 Shankarprasad Raval, 371.
 Shayda, 374.
 Shelley, 256, 266, 326.
Siddhahemcandra, 39, 43.
 Siddhapura, 16, 36, 123, 153.
 Siddharāja Jayasinha, xiii, xviii,
 39-44, 64-68, 97, 111, 153, 165,
 210, 331.
 Siddhapāla, 64.
 Siddharshi, 35.
 Siddhasena Divākara, 32, 39.
Sidhūntasūra, 264.
Śilavatino Rūsa, 162.
 Sindha, 1, 3, 6, 13, 165, 364,
 365, 378.
Sinhāsana-dvātrīṅśikā, 150, 152.
Śirīsha, 358.
Śīśu ane Sakhī, 326, 340.
Śīsupūlavadhā, 30, 73, 202.
Śītūharṇa, 123.
Sītū-vanavāsa, 303.
Sītūāmacupū, 171.
Sītāvirahā, n. 225.
 Śiva, 36, 41, 72, 76, 88, 104, 119,
 125, 126, 137, 140, 159, 179,
 220, 281.
 Śivadāsa, 162, n. 225.
 Śivāji, 173, 207, 303.
Śīva Purāna, 119, 203.
Śiyāvākshanaāmeh, 211.
Smarāṇamukura, 266, 270, 271.
Smarāṇasamhītā, 266, 267-70.
Smarāṇayātrā, 319.
 Smṛitis, 79, 94.
Snehamudrā, 253, 264.
Snehasamibhrama, 325, 330.
Snehayajña, 358.
 Sodhala, 38.
Sohiyāmehār, 365.
 Solana, 78.
 Somaçandra, 38.
 Somadeva, 45, 150.
 Somanātha, the deity, 37, 40, 41,
 66, 76, 104, 105.
 Somaprabha, 56, 64, 97.
 Somasundara, 86, 89, 90, 92, 93,
 200.
 Someśvara, 43, 67-70, 71, 72, 75,
 77, 79, 123.
 Sorabji Bengali, 233.
Sorāṭhī Somanātha, 303.
Sphutasiddhānta, n. 29.
Srāddha, 188, 193.
Śrīdūsa, 209.
 Śrīdhara, 101.
 Śriharsha, 45, 122.
 Śrīmāla see Bhīnnamāla.
 Śrīmālas, 74, 164.
 Śrī Nāthji, the deity, 135, 218.
 Śrīpāla, 44, 64, 73.
Srīṅgāramālā, 140.
Śrīṅgārā-vairāgyataraṅgini, 65.
Śrotasvinī, 366.
Stavanamañjarī, 349.
 Sthīramati, 26.
Sthulibhadrafāga, 88.
Strīomān Vasantāvātāra, 357.
Subhadrāharāṇa, 188.
 Subhaṭa, 68, 72.

- Sudābohterī*, 203.
Sudāmacarita, 143, 188, 197.
Sudarśana, monthly, 306.
Sudarśana, weekly, 349.
Sudarśana Gadyāvali, 264.
 Suez, Canal, ix.
Śukadevākhyāna, 203.
Śukasaptati, 150, 153.
Sukṛtakīrtikallolīnī, 72.
Sukṛtasamkīrtana, 71.
Suktimuktāvali, 65.
 Sultans of Gujarāta, 3, 6, 83, 107,
 108, 111, 112, 209, 364.
 Sumati Trivedi, 348.
 Sundara, 187.
Sundara Kāmadāra, 203.
 Sunderji Betai, 370.
Sunyaśeṣa, 369.
 Sūradāsa, 148.
 Śurasena, See Māthurā.
Surasundarīrāsa, 166, 169.
 Surat, x, 5, 10, 104, 112, 173,
 174, 187, 208, 209, 210, 221,
 230, 231, 232, 234, 235, 237,
 240, 242, 252, 303, 306, 327,
 328, 330.
Suratasamgrāma, 143.
Surathotsava, 67, 70, 77.
Surat Samācāra, 235.
Surekhāharana, n. 225.
Sūrpāraka, 2, 5, 11, 29, 38.
 Sursinhji Gohel, see Kalapi.
Svaira-vihāra, 359.
Svapnadrashtā, 325, 330.
Svarganīsarānī, 188.
Svarūpanī kāfi, 212.
 Svayambhudeva, 49.
Swadeshīdharmā, 322.
 Swadeshism, 236, 252.
 Swaminarāyaṇa, 216, n.225, 235.
Taittiriya Āraṇyaka 126.
Tamārū Rāha, 280.
Tanukhā, 344.
Tapatyākhyāna, 199.
Tarangalolā, 23, 34, 108, 155,
 219, 375.
 Taraporevala, Dadi, 283.
 Taraporevala, Dr. I. J. S., viii 324.
 Taraporevala, Pestonji, 283.
Tārīkh-e-Sorathā, 210.
Tarpana, 325, 336.
 Tarunprabha, 86, 92, 93.
 Taylor, Dr. Rev., 236.
 Tejahpāla, xviii, 66, 67.
 Tessitori, Dr., n. 98, 384.
 Thakordāsa Daru, 209.
 Thakur Naranji Vasonji, 303.
 Theosophy, xiv.
Thodānka Rasadarśano, n. 134,
 n. 189, n. 224, n. 250, 326,
 339, n. 340.
 Tilak, Lokamanya, 125, 251, 252,
 263, 264, 330.
Tilakmañjari, 35.
Traṇa Nāṭako, 349.
 Tribhuvan Purushottam Luhar
 (Sundaram), 368.
Trishashtikālākūpurushacarita,
 41, 43.
 Trivikrama, 45, 122.
 Tuljaram Sukharam, 233, 234.
 Tulsidāsa, 115, 148.
 Turks, 103-5, 210.
Udayabhāna, 304.
 Udayaprabha, 72.
Udayasundarikathā, 38.
Udbodhana, 293.
Uddhavagītā, n. 225.

- Udhava, 119.
Udyamakarmasainvāḍa, 203.
 Udyotana, 23, n. 26, 34.
Ugati Juvānī, 288.
 Ujjain, Ujjayini, 13, 16, 28, 29, 37, 39, 43, 78, 97, 152, 155, 160, 166.
Ullāgharāghava, 67, 70.
 Ulugh Khan, 66, 83.
Umā-devdī, 156.
 Umāpati, 128.
 Umashankar Joshi, 370.
 University of Bombay, The, x, 231, 237, 252, 261, 266, 292, 325.
 University of Calcutta, vii.
Upadeśamālā, 92.
 Upagupta, 300.
Upamitibhavaprapaṇcakathā, 35.
Upanishads, 184, 292.
 Urdu, 165, 209, 210, 213, 240, 276, 304, 305.
Ushū, 293, 302.
Uslūkānta, 303.
Utsargamālā, 237.
Uttarārūmacarita, 292.
 Uvvata, 37.

 Vaḍanagara, 10, 16, 37, 43, 76, 136, 140.
Vadhu Rekhācitro ane Bijū Badhuī, 349.
Vaḍodarāne Vaḍale, 303.
 Vāgbhata, 44.
 Vāghelas, 65, 66, 76, 83, 101, 116, 210.
Vaidhavyacitra, 241.
 Vaidya, n. 27, n. 28.
Vairāgyalātā, 202.
Vairocanaparājaya, 44.

Vaishṇava Śodashagrantha, 292.
 Vaishṇavism, 178, 179, 218, 220, 233, 248, 375.
 Vaiśyas, 164, 182.
Vetāla-pañcavin'satikā, 150.
Vājasaneyi, 37.
Vaktrāsuraḥkhyāna, 220.
 Valabha Kāyastha, 38.
 Valabhīpura, 20, 26, 29, 31, 37, 48, 76.
 Valabhīs, 17, 21, 38, 76.
 Vallabhabhāṭa, n. 225.
 Vallabha, poet, 176, 177, 187, 200-3.
 Vallabhācārya, 134, 135, 139, 216, 220.
Vallabhāḥkhyāna, 135.
Vallabhano Parivāra, 220.
 Vālmiki, 38.
Vāmanacaritra, 188.
 Vanarāja, 27, 97.
Vanarāja Cāvaḍo, 248.
Vanavarṇana, 241.
 Vānkāner Nāṭaka Samāja, 294, 304.
Vanmalā ni Diary, 353.
Vartāvihāra, 362.
 Vārthema, 174.
Vasanta, monthly, 291, 306.
Vasantanā Pado, 142.
Vasantavijaya, 273.
Vasantavilāsa, 71, 90.
Vasanatotsava, 292, 298.
 Vastupāla, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 77, 78, 79, 85, 163.
Vastupālatejahpālāprasasti, 72.
Vāsudevacarita, 22.
Vasudevahinḍī, 23.
 Vatsarāja, 38.
Vaśaśethmunī Svātantrya, 337.

- āyu Purāṇa, 18, 113.
edānta, xix, 178, 179, 184, 220, 265.
edas, and Vedic, 14, 29, 32, 41, 113, 114, 115, 126, 129, 245, 292, 378.
 enkatādhvarin, 176, 177.
eranū Vasulāta, 324, 325, 327-9.
etūlapañcavinsatikā, 150, 152.
idhātūni Vārtā, 203.
idhavū Vreha, 241.
 idyagauri Nilkanth, Lady, 348.
idyāvīlāsāno Pavāḍo, 160.
 ijayalaxmi Trivedi, 349.
 ijayasena, 68, 85.
 Vikrama, 97.
ijayavinoda, 236.
 ijayrai Kalyanrai, 372.
ikrama and Khūprācorāsa, 153.
Vikramacaritra Cupāi, 152.
 Vikramāditya, Candragupta II, 13, 41, 42, 130, 152, 153, 155, 167, 168, 260, 337, see also Gupta Emperors.
Vikramorvaśiyam, 292.
Vilāsikā, 283.
Vinalaprabandha, 164-5, 174.
Viṇāveli, 304.
 Vinayak Mehta, 371.
 Vinaycandra, 85, 160.
 Vindhyās, viii.
Vinecatanvūrtā, see Vidyūvilāsa, 160, 203.
Vinoda-vihāra, 362.
 Vīrdhavalā, 65, 66, 71, 72.
Vīramatī, 247.
Vīra Narmad, 372.
Vīra Vallabhbbhai, 371.
 Vīrjī, 187, 209.
 Viśākhadatta, 337.
 Viśaladeva, 66, 74, 83.
 Vishṇu, 76, 106, 113, 115, 126, 127, 146, 211, 218, 292.
Vishṇubhakticandrodaya, 116.
 Vishṇudāsa, 119, 188.
Vishnu Purāṇa, n. 10, 16, 17, 126.
Vīsmī Sadī, monthly, 372.
Viśvagītā, 292, 300.
Viśvaguṇādārśa, 176.
Viśvāmītrārshī, 325.
 Viśvanātha Jani, 136, 188.
 Viśvanāth Bhatt, 372.
Viśvaratha, 325.
Viśvesvarīkhyāna, 203.
Vitak-ni-Vāto, 372.
Vitarāgaprasasti, 41.
 Viṭhalanāthaji, 135.
Vivartatūlī, 266.
 Vivekanand, Swami, 252.
Viveka-vaṇasāro, 188.
Vividhatīrthakalpa, 6.
 Vraja, 135, 145, 203, 210, 218, 220, 239.
 Vrajalal Kalidas Shastri, 237.
 Vyāsa, Dvaipāyana, 71, 206.
 Walt Whitman, 298.
 War, The European, 307, 308.
 West, The, influence of, 229, 232, 235, 240, 244, 248, 251, 252, 262, 265, 271, 376.
 Western Culture, 200, 229, 230, 253 281, 377.
 Wilhelm Meister, 272.
 Wordsworth, 256, 266.
 Yādavas, Yadus, 11, 12, 20.

- Yājñavalkya, 18.
 Yajnika, 292.
Yakshapraśnottara, 200.
 Yamunācārya, 127.
 Yaśahavīra, 68.
 Yaśahcandra, 47.
 Yaśahpāla, 62, 64, 72.
 Yaśodharman, 26.
 Yervada pact, 310.
Yogasāstra 41, 43, 63, 92.
Young India, weekly, 307, 308, 313.
Yudhishṭhiravṛkodarākhyāna, 200.
 Zafar Khan, 83, 101.
Zarthosht-nameh, 211.
 Zaverchand Meghani, 364, 366.
 Zaveri, D. B. Krishnalal. n.209, n.276, 371, 384.
Zerī Sāṇḍa, 305.

OPINION

Dr. A. Berrisdale Keith, D. C. L., D. Litt. of the University of Edinburgh writes:—

Gujarāta has of late attained world renown as the home of Mahātmā Gandhi, the incarnation of the highest ideals of Hindu Dharma, the teacher of a living faith in work for humanity which appeals to all that is finest in the spirit of India, and has won for his motherland a measure of respect far greater than could ever be achieved by material means. It is fitting therefore that it is a devoted adherent of the Master, who has proved by sacrifice and hardship his belief in his ideals, who has essayed to sketch the literary history of his country in close relation to its political and cultural vicissitudes. It is not merely pioneer work, but the field is vast, and the languages used range from Sanskrit through Prakrit and Apabhraṃśa, to Old and Modern Gujarātī, demanding an erudition remarkable in one who has given so much time to public service and who himself is an outstanding author, whose creative art (in the words of Dr. Taraporewala) has brought life and beauty to Gujarātī fiction and drama, and whose philosophy of life has given to Gujarāta both joy and strength.

It is indeed the outstanding merit of Mr. Munshi's work that it is written by one who has studied deeply both the great masters of European literature and the theory of their art, and who can thus put true values on the work of the long series of writers of Gujarāta. Where it is possible for me to test his judgment, it appears singularly happy and accomplished, and Gujarāta should be deeply grateful to him for his work of love, which recognises her accomplishment in letters, but with admirable candour does not seek to conceal her shortcomings. But the author in his love for his own land is fully conscious that Gujarāta can have no meaning and no future except as an expression of Indian culture, and we must all share his hope that, under the stimulus of modern civilisation and nationalism, we may see, within a decade or so, the development of a national language and a commonwealth of literatures, to which each province of Bharatavarsha will have contributed of its best and noblest.

The thanks of all are due to the author for giving in original and translation some of the finest passages of the works he criticises, and for the useful discussion of the progress of language and of metrical forms.

